EMPORIUM. n. s. [ἐμπόριον.] A place of merchandize; a mart; a town of trade; a commercial city.

And while this fam'd emporium we prepare,
The British ocean shall such triumphs boast,

That those who now disdain our trade to share,
Shall rob like pirates on our wealthy coast. Dryden.

I take the prosperous estate of this great emporium to be owing to those instances of charity. Atterbury.

TO EMPOVERISH. v. a. [paupere, French.]

1. To make poor; to depauperate; to reduce to indigence.

Since they might talk better as they lay together, they impoverish'd their cloaths to enrich their bed, which, for that night, might well scorn the shrine of Venus. Sidney.

Your's sounds aloud, and tells us you excel
No less in courage than in singing well;

While, unconcern'd, you let your country know,
They have impoverish'd themselves, not you. Waller.

For sense of honour, if it impoverisheth a man, it is, in his esteem, neither honour nor sense. South.

Fresh roses bring,
To strew my bed, 'till the impoverish'd Spring Confess her want. Prior.

2. To lessen fertility; as tillage impoverishes land.

EMPOVERISHER. n. s. [from impoverish.]

1. One that makes others poor.

2. To give natural force; to enable.

Does not the same power that enables them to heal, empower them to destroy? Baker on Learnings.

EMPRESS. n. s. [contracted from empress, which is retained by Johnson in the following lines]

1. The queen of an emperour.

- Let your nimble feet
Tread subtle circles, that may always meet
In point to him; and figures to express
The grace of him, and his great emperefs. Ben Jonson.
2. A female invested with imperial dignity;
a female sovereign.
Empress of this fair world, resplendent Eve! Milton.
Yet, London, empress of the northern clime,
By an high fate thou greatly didst expire. Dryden.
Wisdom, thou say'st, from heav'n receiv'd her birth;
Her beams transmitted to the subject earth:
Yet this great empress of the human soul,
Does only with imagin'd power controul,
If restless passion, by rebellious sway,
Compels the weak usurper to obey. Prior.
- EMPRISE. n. s. [emprise, French.] Attempt of danger; undertaking of hazard; enterprise.
Noble minds of yore, allied were
In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Fairy Queen.
A double conquest must you make,
If you achieve renown by this emprise. Fairfax.
Fierce faces threat'ning wars;
Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise. Milton.
Thus, 'till the sun had travell'd half the skies,
Ambush'd we lie, and wait the bold emprise. Pope.
- EMPTIER. n. s. [from empty.] One that empties; one that makes any place void by taking away what it contained.
The emptiers have emptied them out, and married their vine-branches. Nabum, ii. 2.
- EMPTINESS. n. s. [from empty.]
1. Absence of plenitude; inanity.
Where cities stood,
Well fence'd, and numerous, desolation reigns
And emptiness; dismay'd, unfed, unhous'd,
The widow and the orphan stroll. Philips.
2. The state of being empty.
His coffers found
With hollow poverty and emptiness. Shakespeare.
3. A void space; vacuity; vacuum.
Nor could another in your room have been,
Except an emptiness had come between. Dryden.
The ordinary air in which we live and respire, is of so thin a composition, that sixteen thousand one hundred and forty-nine parts of its dimensions are mere emptiness and nothing; and the remaining one only, material and real substance. Bentley.
4. Want of substance or solidity.
'Tis this which causes the graces and the loves to take up their habitations in the hardest marble and to subsist in the emptiness of light and shadow.
Dryden's Desires, Pref.
5. Unsatisfactoriness; inability to fill up the desires.
O frail estate of human things,
Now to your cost your emptiness we know. Dryden.
Form the judgement about the worth or emptiness of things here, according as they are or are not of use, in relation to what is to come after. Atterbury.
6. Vacuity of head; want of knowledge.
Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
As shallow streams run dimpling all the way. Pope.
- EMPTION. n. s. [emptio, Latin.] The act of purchasing; a purchase.
There is a dispute among the lawyers, whether Glauco's his exchanging his golden armour with the brazen one of Tydides, was emption or commutation.
Arbutnot on Coins.
- EMPTY. adj. [æmtix, Saxon.]
1. Void; having nothing in it; not full.
I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart; but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shakespeare.
The pit was empty, there was no water in it. Gen.
If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that; there still remains one vessel empty. Barnet.
2. Evacuated; no longer full.
Himself he frees by secret means unseen,
His shackles empty left, himself escaped clean. Spens.
3. Devoid; unfurnished.
VOL. I.

- Art thou thus boldened, man, by thy distress,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty? Shakefp.
Mr. Boyle has shewed, that air may be rarified above ten thousand times in vessels of glass; and the heavens are much emptier of air than any vacuum we can make below. Newton.
4. Unsatisfactory; unable to fill the mind or desires.
Pleas'd in the silent shade with empty praise. Pope.
5. Without any thing to carry; unbur-thened; unfreighted.
They beat him, and sent him away empty. Matt.
When ye go, ye shall not go empty. Exodus.
He alleges that satyrs carried platters full of fruit in their hands; but if they had been empty handed, had they been ever the larger satyrs?
Yet all the little that I got, I spent;
And still return'd as empty as I went. Dryden.
6. Hungry.
My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure. Shakefp.
7. Vacant of head; ignorant; unskilful;
unfurnished with materials for thought.
How comes it that so many worthy and wise men depend upon so many unworthy and empty headed fools? Raleigh.
His answer is a handsome way of exposing an empty, trifling, pretending pedant; the wit lively, the satyr courtly and severe. Felton.
8. Unfruitful; barren.
Seven empty ears blasted with the east wind. Gen.
Israel is an empty vine. Hosea.
9. Wanting substance; wanting solidity; vain.
The god of sleep there hides his heavy head,
And empty dreams on every leaf are spread. Dryden.
- TO EMPTY. v. a. [from the adjective.]
To evacuate; to exhaust; to deprive of that which was contained in it.
Boundless intemperance,
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The emptiers have emptied them out, and married their vine-branches. Nabum, ii. 2.
Sheep are often blind by fulness of blood: cut their tails, and empty them of their blood. Mortimer.
The Euxine sea is conveniently situated for trade, by the communication it has both with Asia and Europe, and the great navigable rivers that empty themselves into it. Arbutnot.
- TO EMPURPLE. v. a. [from purple.] To make of a purple colour; to discolour with purple.
Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off, the bright Pavement, that like a sea of Jasper shone, of purulent matter in any part whatsoever; generally used to signify that in the cavity of the breast only, and which sometimes happens upon the opening of abscesses, or ulcerations of the lungs, or membranes inclosing the breast. Quincy.

An empyema, or a collection of purulent matter in the breast, if not suddenly cured, doth undoubtedly impel the patient into a phthisical consumption. Hall.
There is likewise a consumption from an empyema, after an inflammation of the lungs; which may be known from a weight upon the diaphragm, oppression of the lungs, a difficulty of breathing, and inability to lie on one side, which is that which is found. Arbutnot.
- EMPYREAL. adj. [ἐμπύρεος.] Formed of the element of fire; refined beyond aerial;

pertaining to the highest and purest region of heaven. [Tickell accents it on the penult.]

Now went forth the morn,
Such as in highest heav'n, array'd in gold Empyrean. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Go, soar with Plato to th' empyrean sphere,
To the first good, first perfect, and first fair. Pope.
But empyrean forms, howe'er in sight
Gastr'd and dismember'd easily unite. Tickell.

EMPYREAN. n. s. [ἐμπύρεος.] The highest heaven where the pure element of fire is supposed to subsist.
Almighty Father from above,
From the pure empyrean, where he sits High thron'd above all height, bent down his eye. Milton.

Under his burning wheel
The steadfast empyrean shook throughout,
All but the throne itself of God. Milton's Par. Lost.
The empyrean rung
With hallelujahs. Milton's Paradise Lost.

EMPYREUM. } n. s. [ἐμπύρευμα.] The EMPYREUMA. } burning to of any matter in boiling or distillation, which gives a particular offensive smell. Quincy.

It is so far from admitting an empyreum, that it burns clear away without leaving any cinders, or a dust about it. Harvey.
The hopes of an elixir insensibly evaporate, and vanish to air, or leave in the recipient a foul em-pyreuma. Decay of Piety.

EMPYREUMATICAL. adj. [from empyreuma.] Having the smell or taste of burnt substances.

Empyreumatical oils, distilled by strong fires in retorts, may be brought to emulate essential oils drawn in limicks. Boyle.

EMPYROSIS. n. s. [ἐμπύρωσις.] Conflagration; general fire.

The former opinion that held these cataclysms and empyroses universal, was such as held that it put a total consummation unto things in this lower world, especially that of conflagration. Hall.

TO EMULATE. v. a. [emulor, Latin.]

1. To rival; to propose as one to be equalled or excelled.
2. To imitate with hope of equality, or superiour excellence.

I would have Him emulate you: 'tis no shame to follow
The better precedent. Ben Jonson's Catiline.
Those fair ideas to my aid I'll call,
And emulate my great original, Dryden.
What though no weeping loves thy ashes grace,
Nor polish'd marble emulate thy face. Pope.

3. To be equal to; to rise to equality with.
I see how thy eye would emulate the diamond. Shak.
We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

4. To imitate; to copy; to resemble.
It is likewise attended with a delirium, fury, and an involuntary laughter, the convulsion emulating
this motion. Arbutnot.

EMULATION. n. s. [emulatio, Latin.]

1. Rivalry; desire of superiority.

Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in't it had; for where
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword, I'll pitch at him some way,
Or wrath or craft may get him. Shakespeare.
There was neither envy nor emulation amongst them. 1. Mac.

Aristotle allows that some emulation may be good, and may be found in some good men; yet envy he utterly condemns, as wicked in itself, and only to be found in wicked minds. Spratt.

The apostle exhorts the Corinthians to an holy and general emulation of the charity of the Macedonians, in contributing freely to the relief of the poor saints at Jerusalem. South.

A noble emulation heats your breast,
And your own name now robs you of your rest:

Good actions still must be maintain'd with good,
As bodies nourish'd with resembling food. Dryden.

2. Envy; desire of depressing another;
contest; contention; discord.
What madness rules in brainick men,
When for so slight and frivolous a cause,
Such factious emulations shall arise! Shakespeare.

They measure all, of other excellence
Not emulous, nor care who them excels. Milton.
By fair rewards our noble youth we raise
To emulous merit, and to thirst of praise. Prior.
Good Howard, emulous of the Grecian art. Prior.

3. Factious; contentious.
Whose glorious deeds, but in the fields of late,
Made emulous millions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drove great Mars to faction. Shakespeare.

E'MULOUSLY. adv. [from emulous.] With desire of excelling or outgoing another.
So tempt they him, and emulously vie
To bribe a voice, that empires would not buy. Gravv.

EMU'LSION. n. f. [emulsio, Latin.] A form of medicine, by bruising oily seeds and kernels, and drawing out their substances with some liquor, that thereby becomes milky. Quincy.
The aliment is dissolved by an operation resembling that of making an emulsion; in which operation the oily parts of nut, and seeds, being gently ground in a marble mortar, and gradually mixed with some watery liquor, or dissolved into a sweet, thick, turbid, milky liquor, resembling the chyle in an animal body. Arbutnot.

EMU'NCTORIES. n. f. [emunctorium, Latin.]
'Those parts of the body where any thing excrementitious is separated and collected, to be in readiness for ejection. Quincy.

Superfluous matter deflows from the body under their proper emunctories. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
There are receptacles in the body of man, and emunctories to drain them of superfluous choler. More.
Discourfing of the lungs, I shew that they are the grand emunctory of the body; that the main end of respiration is continually to discharge and expel an excrementitious fluid out of the mass of blood.
Woodward's Natural History.

The regimen in quinfies, which proceed from an obstruction of the glands, must be to use such warm liquors as relax those glands, such as, by stimulating, open the emunctories to secrete the humour. Arbut.

EN. An inseparable particle borrowed by us from the French, and by the French form-talk.

Finding

By this encompassment and drift of question,

That they do know my son, come you more near. Shakespeare.

ENCURE.

ENCORE. adv. [French.] Again; once more. A word used at publick shows when a singer, or fidler, or buffoon, is desired by the audience to do the same thing again.

To the same notes thy sons shall hum or snore,
And all thy yawning daughters cry encore. Dunciad.

ENCOUNTER. n. f. [encontre, French.]

1. Duel; single fight; conflict.

Thou hast beat me out
Twelve several times, and I have nightly since Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me. Shakesp.

Let's leave this keen encounter of our wits,
And fall something into a slower method. Shakesp.
Pallas th' encounter seeks; but ere he throws,
To Tuscan Tiber thus address'd his vows:
O sacred stream, direct my flying dart,
And give to pass the proud Halesius' heart. Dryd.

2. Battle; fight in which enemies rush against each other.

Two black clouds
With heav'n's artillery fraught, come rattling on Over the Caspian; then stand front to front, How'ring a space, 'till winds the signal blow
To join their dark encounter in mid air. Milton.

3. Eager and warm conversation, either of love or anger.

The peaking cornuto comes to me in the instant of our encounter, after we had spoke the prologue of our comedy. Shakespeare.

4. Accidental congress; sudden meeting.

Propitious Pallas, to secure her care,
Around him spread a veil of thicken'd air,
'To shun th' encounter of the vulgar crowd. Pope.

5. Accosting; transient or unexpected address.

But in what habit will you go along?
—Not like a woman; for I would prevent the loose encounters of lascivious men. Shakespeare.

Three parts of Brutus
Is our's already; and the man entire,
Upon the next encounter, yields him ours. Shakesp.

6. Casual incident; occasion. This sense is scarcely English.

An equality is not sufficient for the utility of character:
'tis further necessary, that the same spirit
appear in all sort of encounters. Pope.

To ENCO'UNTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To meet face to face; to front.

If I must die,
I will encounter darkness as a bride,
And hug it in mine arms. Shakespeare.
The fashion of the world is to avoid cost, and you encounter it. Shakespeare.

Thou stronger may'st endure the flood of light;
And while in shades I hear my fainting sight,
Encounter the descending excellence. Dryden.

Putting themselves in order of battle, they encountered their enemies. Knoller's Hist. of the Turks.

3. To meet with reciprocal kindness.

See they encounter thee with their hearts thanks;
Both sides are even. Shakesp. Macbeth.

4. To attack; to meet in the front.

Which way soever we turn, we are encountered with clear evidences and sensible demonstrations of a Deity. Tillotson.

5. To oppose; to oppugn.

Jurors are not bound to believe two witnesses, if the probability of the fact does reasonably encounter them. Hale.

6. To meet by accident.

I am most fortunate thus to encounter you:
You have ended my business, and I will merrily Accompany you home. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To ENCO'UNTER. v. n.

1. To rush together in a hostile manner; to conflict.

Encounter so,
As doth the fury of two desperate men,
Which, in the very meeting, fall and die. Shakesp.

Five times, Marcius,
Have I fought with thee; so often hast thou beat me:
And wouldst do so, I think, should we encounter.
As often as we eat. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. To engage; to fight: it hath with before the thing.

Our wars
Will turn into a peaceful comick sport,
When ladies crave to be encounter'd with. Shakesp.

Both the wings of his fleet had begun to encounter with the Christians. Knoller's Hist. of the Turks.

Those who have the most dread of death, must be content to encounter with it, whether they will or no. Wake.

3. To meet face to face.

4. To come together by chance.

ENCO'UNTERER. n. f. [from encounter.]

1. Opponent; antagonist; enemy.

The lion will not kick with his feet, but he will strike such a stroke with his tail, that he will break the back of his encounterer with it. More.

The doctrines of the reformation have kept the field against all encounterers. Atterbury.

2. One that loves to accost others. An old term.

Oh, these encounterers! so gilt of tongue,
They give a coaxing welcome ere it comes;
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts
To every ticklish leader. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

To ENCO'URAGE. v. a. [encourager, French.]

1. To animate; to incite to any thing.

They encourage themselves in an evil matter. Pf. lxiv. 5.

2. To give courage to; to support the spirits; to inspirit; to embolden.

Kinds of musick encourage men, and make them warlike, or make them soft and effeminate. Bacon.
I would neither encourage the rebels, nor discourage the protestants loyalty. King Charles.

3. To raise confidence; to make confident.

I doubt not but there are ways to be found, to assist our reason in this most useful part; and this the judicious Hooker encourages me to say. Locke.

ENCO'URAGEMENT. n. f. [from encourage.]

1. Incitement to any action or practice; incentive.

2. Encrease of confidence.

Such strength of heart
Thy conduct and examples gives; nor small Encouragement, Godolphin, wife and just. Philips.

3. Favour; countenance; support.

For when he dies, farewell all honour, bounty,
All generous encouragement of arts. Orway's Orphan.
The reproach of immortality will lie heaviest against an established religion, because those who have no religion will profess themselves of that which has the encouragement of the law. Rogers.

ENCO'URAGER. n. f. [from encourage.] One that supplies incitements to any thing; a favourer.

Live then, thou great encourager of arts,
Live ever in our thankful hearts. Dryden.
As the pope is a master of polite learning, and a great encourager of arts; so at Rome these arts immediately thrive, under the encouragement of the prince. Addison.

To ENCRO'ACH. v. a. [accrocher, from

croc, a hook, French.]

1. To make invasions upon the right of another; to put a hook into another man's possessions to draw them away.

Those Irish captains of counties have encroached upon the queen's freeholders and tenants. Spenser.

2. To advance gradually and by stealth upon that to which one has no right: with on before the subject.

This hour is mine; if for the next I care, I grow too wide,
And do encroach upon death's side. Herbert.
Tisiphone, let loose from under ground,
Before her drives discaia and allright;

And every moment rises to the fight,
Aspiring to the skies, encroaching on the light. Dryd.

To ENCRO'ACH. v. n.

1. To creep on gradually without right.

The superstition that riseth voluntarily, and by degrees mingleth itself with the rites, even of every divine service, done to the only true God, must be considered of as a creeping and encroaching evil. Hooker.

Th' encroaching ill you early should oppose;
Flatter'd, 'tis worse, and by indulgence grows. Dryd.

2. To pass bounds.

They fabled how the serpent, whom they call'd
Ophion, with Eurynome, the wide Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule Of high Olympus. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Next fence'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' encroaching cattle from thy ground. Dryd.

ENCRO'ACHER. n. f. [from encroach.]

1. One who seizes the possession of another by gradual and silent means.

The bold encroachers on the deep,
Gain by degrees huge tracts of land,
'Till Neptune, with one general sweep, Turns all again to barren strand. Swift.

2. One who makes slow and gradual advances beyond his rights.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher. Clarissa.

ENCRO'ACHMENT. n. f. [from encroach.]

1. An unlawful gathering in upon another man. For example: if two men's grounds lie together, the one presses too far upon the other; or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service to the lord, and the lord takes three: so the Spencers encroached to themselves royal power and authority. Cowel.

But this usurper his encroachment proud.
Stays not on man: to God his tow'r intends Siege, and defiance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If it be a man's known principle to depart from his right, ill men will make unjust encroachments upon him. Atterbury.

2. To advance into the territories or rights of another.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of: this left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.

The ancient Romans made many encroachments on the sea, and laid the foundations of their palaces within the very borders of it. Addison on Italy.

The people, since the death of Solon, had already made great encroachments. Swift.

To ENCUMBER. v. a. [encombrer, French.]

1. To clog; to load; to impede.

We have, by this many years experience, found that exceeding great good, not encumbered with any notable inconvenience. Hooker.

Encumber'd with his vest, without defence. Dryd.

2. To entangle; to embarrass; to obstruct.

The verbal copier is incumbered with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself. Dryden.

The god awak'd,
And thrice in vain he shook his wing, Encumber'd in the silken string. Prior.

3. To load with debts; as, his estate is encumbered with mortgages.

ENCUMBRANCE. n. f. [from encumber.]

1. Clog; load; impediment.

Philosophers agreed in despising riches, at best, considering them as unnecessary encumbrances of life. Temple.

Dead limbs are an encumbrance to the body, instead of being of use to it. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Excessiveness; useless addition.

Strip from the branching Alps their piny load,
The huge encumbrance of horridick woods. Thomson.

3. Burthen upon an estate.

In respect of the encumbrances of a living, consider whether it be sufficient for his family, and to maintain hospitality. Ayl.

ENCYCLICAL. adj. [εγκυκλιος.] Circular; sent round through a large region.

This council was not received in patriarchal sees, which is evident from Photius's encyclical epistle to the patriarch of Alexandria. Stillingfleet.

ENCYCLOPEDIA, n. s. [εγκυκλοπαιδεια.]

ENCYCLOPEDIA. The circle of sciences; the round of learning.

In this encyclopaedia and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we must observe two circles, that while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the sober wheel of the other. Brown's Vulgar Err.

Every science borrows from all the rest, and we cannot attain any single one without the encyclopaedia. Glanville.

This art may justly claim a place in the encyclopaedia, especially such as serves for a model of education for an able politician. Arbutnot.

ENCYSTED. adj. [ενυστος.] Enclosed in a vesicle or bag.

Encysted tumours borrow their names from a cyst or bag in which they are contained. Sharp's Surgery.

END. n. s. [enb, Saxon.]

1. The extremity of the length of any thing materially extended. Of bodies that have equal dimensions we do not use end: the extremity of breadth is side.
- Jonathan put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in a honeycomb. 1 Sam.
2. Extremity or last part in general.
- The extremity and bounds of all bodies we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into this endless expansion: of that it can neither find, nor conceive any end. Locke.
3. The last particle of any assignable duration.
- Behold the day groweth to an end. Judges.
- At the end of two months she returned. Judges.
- If the world's age and death be argu'd well
- By the sun's fall, which now tow'rs earth doth bend,
- Then we might fear, that virtue, since she fell
- So low as woman, should be near her end. Donne.
4. The conclusion or cessation of any action.
- Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons. Gen.
- Yet vainly most their age in study spend;
- No end of writing books, and to no end. Denham.

- Confound your hidden falsehood, and award
- Either of you to the other's end. Shak. Rich. III.
15. Consequence; conclusive event; conclusion.
- O, that a man might know
- The end of this day's business ere it come!
- But it sufficeth that the day will end. Shakespeare.
- The end of these things is death. Rom. vi. 21.
16. Fragment; broken piece.
- Thus I clothe my naked villainy
- With old odd ends, stol'n forth of Holy Writ,
- And seem a saint. Shakespeare. Rich. III.
17. Purpose; intention.
- There was a purpose to reduce the monarchy to a republick, which was far from the end and purpose of that nation. Clarendon.
- I have lov'd!
- What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
- Can he who kill'd thy brother, live for thee? Dryd.
- Heav'n, as its instrument, my courage sends;
- Heav'n ne'er sent those who fight for private ends. Dryden.
- Others are apt to attribute them to some false end or intention. Addison's Spectator.
18. Thing intended; final design; the termination of intellectual prospect.
- Wisdom may have framed one and the same thing to serve commodiously for divers ends, and of those ends any one may be sufficient cause for continuance, though the rest have ceased. Hooker.
- All those things which are done by him, have some end for which they are done; and the end for which they are done, is a reason of his will to do them. Hooker.
- Her only end is never-ending bliss;
- Which is, the eternal face of God to see,
- Who last of ends, and first of causes is;
- And to do this, she must eternal be. Darwin.
- The end of the commandment is charity. 1 Tim.
- Two things I shall propound to you, as ends;
- since the wise men of this world have made them theirs. Suckling.

When neither I can read nor he can write. Gay.

Hear how learn'd Greece her useful rules indites,
When to repress, and when indulge our flights! Pope.

TO ENDITE. v. n. To compose.

Your battles they hereafter shall indite,
And draw the image of our Mars in fight. Waller.

ENDICTMENT. } n. s. [from endite.] A

ENDITEMENT. } bill or declaration made in form of law, for the benefit of the commonwealth; or an accusation for some offence exhibited unto jurors, and by their verdict found to be true, before an officer can have power to punish the same offence. Cowel.

'Tis necessary that the species of the crime be described in the libel or articles, which our English lawyers call an indictment or information. Ayliffe.

We never draw any indictment at all against them, but think commendably even of them. Hooker.

The hand-writing against him may be cancelled in the court of heaven, and yet the indictment run on in the court of conscience. South.

Attend the court, and thou shalt briefly find
In that one place the manners of mankind;
Hear the indictments, then return again,
Call thyself wretch, and, if thou dar'st, complain. Dryden.

ENDIVE. n. s. [endive, French; intybm, Latin.] A plant.

Endive, or succory, is of several sorts; as the white, the green, and the curled. Mortimer.

ENDLESS. adj. [from end.]

1. Having no end; being without conclusion or termination.

Nothing was more endless than the common method of comparing eminent writers by an opposition of particular passages in them. Pope.

2. Infinite in longitudinal extent.

As it is pleasant to the eye to have an endless prospect, so it is some pleasure to a finite understanding to view unlimited excellencies. Tillotson.

3. Infinite in duration; perpetual.

None of the heathens, how curious soever in searching out all kinds of outward ceremonies, could ever once endeavour to resemble herein the church's care for the endless good of her children. Hooker.

But after labours long, and sad delay,
Brings them to joyous rest, and endless bliss. Spenser.

All our glory extinct, and happy state,
Here swallow'd up in endless misery! Milton.

Some of them are of very great antiquity and continuance, others more late and of less endurance.
Spenser's Ireland.

2. Patience; sufferance.

Great things of small
One can create; and in what place foe'er
Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain,
Through labour and endurance. Milton.
Their fortitude was most admirable in their presence and endurance of all evils, of pain, and of death. Temple.

3. State of suffering.

I would fain know whether that man takes a rational course to preserve himself, who refuses the endurance of these higher troubles, to secure himself from a condition infinitely more miserable? South.

4. Delay; procrastination. Obsolete.

I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers, and have heard you, Without endurance further. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

To ENDU'RE. v. a. [endurer, French; durare, Latin.]

1. To bear; to sustain; to support unbroken.

The hardness of bodies is caused chiefly by the jejuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts, which make them not only hard, but fragile, and less enduring of pressure. Bacon.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryd.

2. To bear with patience.

So dear I love him, that with him all deaths
I could endure; without him, live no life. Milton.
The gout haunts usually the easy and the rich, the nice and the lazy, who grow to endure much, because they can endure little. Temple.

By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our law. Shakespear's Cymbeline.

Taking into the city all such things as they thought needful for the enduring of the siege, they destroyed all the rest. Kneller's Hist.

Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life. John.
Doth the crown endure to every generation?
Proverbs.

By being able to repeat measures of time, or ideas of stated length of duration in our minds, we can imagine duration, where nothing does really endure or exist. Locke.

A charm that shall to age endure
The mind benignant and pure. Anon.

2. To brook; to bear; to admit.

For how can I endure to see the evil that shall come unto my people? Or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred? Esth. viii. 6.

Our great English lords could not endure that any kings should reign in Ireland but themselves; nay, they could hardly endure that the crown of England should have any power over them. Devise.

ENDU'RER. n. f. [from endure.]

1. One that can bear or endure; sustainer; sufferer.

They are very valiant and hardy; for the most part great endurers of cold, labour, hunger, and all hardiness. Spenser.

2. Continuer; laster.

E'NDWISE. adv. [end and wise.] Erectly;
uprightly; on end.

A rude and unpolished America, peopled with slothful and naked Indians, living in pitiful huts and cabbins, made of poles set endwise. Ray on the Great.

To E'NECATE. v. a. [eneco, Lat.] To kill;
to destroy.

Some plagues partake of such a pernicious degree of malignity, that, in the manner of a most presen-taneous poison, they enecate in two or three hours, suddenly corrupting or extinguishing the vital spirits.
Harvey on the Plague.

E'NEMY. n. f. [ennemi, French; inimicus,
Latin.]

1. A publick foe.

All these statutes speak of English rebels and Irish enemies, as if the Irish had never been in condition of subjects, but always out of the protection of the law. Davies on Ireland.

The enemy thinks of raising three score thousand men for the next summer. Addison on the War.

2. A private opponent; an antagonist.

I say unto you, love your enemies. Matt.

3. Any one who regards another with malevolence; not a friend.

Kent in disguise,
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service
Improper for a slave. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. One that dislikes.

He that designedly uses ambiguities, ought to be looked on as an enemy to truth and knowledge. Locke.

Bold is the critick, who dares prove
These heroes were no friends to love;
And bolder he who dares aver,
That they were enemies to war. Prior.

5. [In theology.] The fiend; the devil.

Defend us from the danger of the enemy.
Common Prayer.

ENERGETICK. adj. [ενεργητικος.]

1. Forcible; active; vigorous; powerful in effect; efficacious.

These miasms entering the body, are not so energetick as to venerate the entire mass of blood in an instant. Harvey.

2. Operative; active; working; not at rest.

If then we will conceive of God truly, and, as far as we can, adequately, we must look upon him not only as an eternal Being, but also as a Being eternally energetick. Grew.

E'NERGY. n. f. [ενεργια.]

1. Power not exerted in action.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them, but are energies merely; for their working upon mirrors, and places of echo, doth not alter any thing in those bodies. Bacon.

2. Force; vigour; efficacy; influence.

Whether with particles of heavenly fire
The God of nature did his soul inspire;
Or earth, but new divided from the sky,
And pliant still, retain'd th' ethereal energy. Dryd.
God thinketh with operation infinitely perfect, with an omnipotent as well as an eternal energy.
Grew.

Beg the blessed Jesus to give an energy to your imperfect prayers, by his most powerful intercession.
Smalridge.

What but God!
Inspiring God! who, boundless spirit all,
And unremitting energy, pervades,
Adjusts, sustains, and agitates the whole. Thomson.

3. Faculty; operation.

Matter, though divided into the subtlest parts, moved swiftly, is senseless and stupid, and makes no approach to vital energy. Ray.

How can concussion of atoms beget self-consciousness, and powers and energies that we feel in our minds? Bentley.

4. Strength of expression; force of signification; spirit; life.

Who did ever, in French authours, see
The comprehensive English energy? Roscommon.
Swift and ready and familiar communication is made by speech; and, when animated by elocution, it acquires a greater life and energy, ravishing and captivating the hearers. Holder.

Many words deserve to be thrown out of our language, and not a few antiquated to be restored, on account of their energy and sound. Swift.

To ENERVATE. v. n. [enervare, Lat.] To weaken; to deprive of force; to emasculate.

Great empires, while they stand, do enervate and destroy the forces of the natives which they have subdued, resting upon their own protecting forces.
Bacon.

Sheepish softness often enervates those who are bred like fondlings at home. Locke.

On each enervate string they taught the note,
To pant, or tremble through an eunuch's throat. Pope.

Footmen exercise themselves, whilst their enervated lords are softly lolling in their chariots.
Arbutnot and Pope.

ENERVATION. n. f. [from enerve.]

starve; to famish; to kill with hunger.

Diell.

To ENFEEBLE. v. a. [from feeble.] To weaken; to enervate; to deprive of strength.

I've belied a lady,
The princelings of this country; and the air on't Revengefully enfeebles me. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

My people are with sickness much enfeebled. Shak.
Much hath hell debas'd, and pain
Enfeebled me, to what I was in heav'n! Milton.

Some employ their time in affairs below the dignity of their persons; and being called by God, or the republick, to bear great burdens, do enfeebled their understandings by fordid and brutish business.

Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Sure, nature form'd me of her softest mold,
Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,
And sunk me even below my own weak sex. Addis.

To ENFEOFF. v. a. [seoffamentum, low Latin.] To invest with any dignities or possessions. A law term.

If the eldest son enfeoff the second, reserving homage, and that homage paid, and then the second son dies without issue, it will descend to the eldest as heir, and the seignory is extinct. Hale.

7. ENFORCER. v. a. [enforcer, French.]

1. To give strength to; to strengthen; to invigorate.
 2. To make or gain by force.
The idle stroke, enforcing furious way,
Missing the mark of his misaimed fight,
Did fall to ground. Fairy Queen.
Sometimes with lunatic bans, sometimes with pray'rs Enforce their charity. Shakespeare's King Lear.
 3. To put in act by violence.
Sker away as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Shakefp.
 4. To instigate; to provoke; to urge on;
to animate.
Fear gave her wings, and rage enforc'd my flight
Through woods and plains. Fairy Queen.
If you knew to whom you shew this honour,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you. Shakefp.
 5. To urge with energy.
All revoke
Your ignorant election; enforce his pride,
And his old hate to you. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
He prevailed with him, by enforcing the ill consequence of his refusal to take the office, which would be interpreted to his dislike of the court.
Clarendon.
To avoid all appearance of disaffection, I have taken care to enforce loyalty by an invincible argument. Swift.
 6. To compel; to constrain.
For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil. Shakefp.
A just disdain conceived by that queen, that so wicked a rebel should prevail against her, did move and almost enforce her to send over that mighty army. Davies on Ireland.
 7. To press with a charge. Little used.
In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannick pow'r: If he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the spoils got on the Antiates
Was ne'er distributed. Shakefp. Coriolanus.
- TO ENFORCER. v. n. To prove; to evince;
to shew beyond contradiction.
Which laws in such case we must obey, unless there be reason shewed, which may necessarily enforce that the law of reason, or of God, doth enjoin
the contrary. Hooker.
- ENFORCER. n. f. [from force.] Power;
strength. Not used.
He now defies thee thrice to single fight,
As a petty enterprise of small enforce. Milton.
- ENFORCEDLY. adv. [from enforce.] By violence; not voluntarily; not spontaneously; not by choice.
If thou did'st put this fow'r cold habit on,
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well, but thou Dost it enforcedly: thou'dst courtier be,
Wert thou not beggar. Shakespeare's Timon.
- ENFORCEMENT. n. f. [from enforce.]
1. An act of violence; compulsion; force offered.
Confess'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. Shakespeare.
He that contendeth against these enforcements,
may easily master or resist them. Raleigh's History.
 2. Sanction; that which gives force to a law.
The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established as the enforcements of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice. Locke.
 3. Motive of conviction; urgent evidence.
The personal descent of God himself, and his assumption of our flesh to his divinity, was an enforcement beyond all the methods of wisdom that were ever made use of in the world. Hammond.
 4. Pressing exigence.
More than I have said,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakef. Rich. III.

ENFORCER. n. f. [from enforce.] Compeller; one who effects by violence.

When a man tumbles a cylinder or roller down an hill, 'tis certain that the man is the violent enforcer of the first motion of it. Hammond.

ENFOULDERED. adj. [from foudre, French.]

Mixed with lightning. Obsolete.
Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
With soul enfolded in oak and flaming fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies.
Fairy Queen.

TO ENFRANCHISE. v. a. [from franchise.]

1. To admit to the privileges of a freeman.
The English colonies, and some sects of the Irishry, enfranchised by special charters were admitted to the benefit of the laws. Davies.
Romulus was the natural parent of all those people that were the first inhabitants of Rome, or of those that were after incorporated and enfranchised into that name, city, or government. Hale.
2. To set free from slavery.
Men, forbearing wine, come from drinking healths to a draught at a meal; and, lastly, to discontinue altogether: but if a man have the fortitude and resolution to enfranchise himself at once, that is the best. Bacon's Essays.
If they won a battle, prisoners became slaves, and continued so in their generations, unless enfranchised
by their masters. Temple.
3. To free or release from custody.
His mistress
Did hold his eyes lockt in her crystal looks.
—Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them,
Upon some other paw for fealty. Shakespeare.
4. To denizen; to endenizen.
These words have been enfranchised amongst us.
Watts.

ENFRANCHISEMENT. n. f. [from enfranchise.]

1. Investiture of the privilege of a denizen.
The incorporating a man into any society, or body politick. For example, he that is by charter made denizen of England, is said to be enfranchised; and so is he that is made a citizen of London, or other city, or burghs of any town corporate, because he is made partaker of those liberties that appertain to the corporation. Cowell.
His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg Enfranchisement immediate on his knees. Shakef.
2. Release from prison or from slavery.
Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroll'd enfranchisement. Shakef.

ENFROZEN. particip. [from frozen.] Con-gealed with cold. Not used.

Yet to augment the anguish of my smart,
Thou hast enfrozen her disdainful breast,
That no one drop of pity there doth rest. Spenser.

TO ENGAGE. v. a. [engager, French.]

1. To make liable for a debt to a creditor.
I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
2. To impawn; to stake.
They most perfidiously condemn
Those that engag'd their lives for them. Hudibras.
3. To enlist; to bring into a party.
All wicked men are of a party against religion:
some lust or interest engagetb them against it. Tillotf.
4. To embark in an affair.
So far had we engag'd ourselves, unfortunate souls, that we list'd not to complain, since our complaints could not but carry the greatest accusation to ourselves. Sidney.
Before I engage myself in giving any answer to this objection of inconsumptible lights, I would see the ENG certainly averred. Digby.
5. To unite; to attach; to make adherent.
Good-nature engages every body to him. Addison.
6. To induce; to win by pleasing means; to gain.

To ev'ry duty he could minds engage,
Provoke their courage, and command their rage,
Waller.

His beauty these, and those his blooming age,
The rest his house and his own fame engage. Dryd.
So shall I court thy dearest truth,
When beauty ceases to engage;
So thinking on thy charming youth,
I'll love it o'er again in age. Prior.

7. To bind by any appointment or contract.
We have been firm to our allies, without declining any expence to which we had engaged ourselves, and we have even exceeded our engagement.
Atterbury.

8. To seize by the attention: as, he was deeply engaged in conversation.

9. To employ; to hold in business.
For I shall sing of battles, blood, and rage,
Which princes and their people did engage. Dryden.

10. To encounter; to fight.
The rebel knave, who dares his prince engage,
Proves the just victim of his royal rage. Pope.

TO ENGAGE. v. n.

1. To conflict; to fight.
Upon advertisement of the Scots army, the earl of Holland was sent with a body to meet and engage with it. Clarendon.
2. To embark in any business; to enlist in any party.
'Tis not indeed my talent to engage
In lofty trifles, or to swell my page
With wind and noise. Dryden's Persius.

ENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from engage, engagement, French.]

1. The act of engaging, impawning, or making liable to a debt.
2. Obligation by contract.
We have, in expence, exceeded our engagements.
Atterbury.
3. Adherence to a party or cause; partiality.
This practice may be obvious to any who impartially, and without engagement, is at the pains to examine. Swift.
4. Employment of the attention.
Play, either by our too constant or too long engagement in it, becomes like an employment or profession.
Rogers.
5. Fight; conflict; battle. A word very poetical.
Our army, led by valiant Torrismond,
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryden.
Encourag'd by despair, or obdurate
To fall like men in arms, some dare renew, Feeble engagement, meeting glorious fate
On the firm land. Phillips.

6. Obligation; motive.
This is the greatest engagement not to forfeit an opportunity. Ham.

TO ENGAGE. v. a. [from gaol.] To imprison; to confine.

Within my mouth you have engag'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips. Shakef.

TO ENGARRISON. v. a. [from garrison.]

To protect by a garrison.
Neptune with a guard doth engarrison her strongly.
Howell.

TO ENGENDER. v. a. [engendrer, French.]

1. To beget between different sexes.
This baird love is engendered betwixt lust and idleness.
2. To produce; to form.
Oh nature! thou, who of the self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man is pullt, Engender'st the black toad and adder blue. Shakef.
Again, if souls do other souls beget,
'Tis by themselves, or by the body's pow'r:
If by themselves, what doth their working let,
But they might souls engender ev'ry hour? Davies.
3. To excite; to cause; to produce.
Say, can you fast? Your stomachs are too young,
And abstinence engenders maladies. Shakespeare.
The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends. Shakefp.
That

That engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth. Shakesp.
It unloads the mind, engenders thoughts, and animates virtue. Addison.

4. To bring forth.

Vice engenders shame, and folly brood's o'er grief.
Prior.

To ENGE'NDER. v. n. To be caused; to be produced.

Thick clouds are spread, and storms engender there.
Dryden.

ENGINE. n. f. [engin, French; ingegno, Italian.]

1. Any mechanical complication, in which various movements and parts concur to one effect.

2. A military machine.

This is our engine, towers that overthrows;
Our spear that hurts, our sword that wounds our foes.
Fairf.

3. Any instrument.

The sword, the arrow, the gun, with many terrible engines of death, will be well employed. Raleigh.
He takes the scissars, and extends
The little engine on his finger ends. Pope.

4. Any instrument to throw water upon burning houses.

Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire.
Dryden.

5. Any means used to bring to pass, or to effect. Usually in an ill sense.

Prayer must be divine and heavenly, which the devil with all his engines so violently opposeth.
Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

6. An agent for another. In contempt.

They had the especial engines been, to rear,
His fortunes up into the state they were. Daniel.

ENGINE'ER. n. f. [ingenieur, French.]

One who manages engines: one who directs the artillery of an army.

For 'tis the sport to have the engineer Hoist with his own petard. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Him thus enrag'd,

Deserving from afar, some engineer,
Dext'rous to guide th' unerring charge, design'd,
By one nice shot, to terminate the war. Phillips.

An author, who points his satire at a great man, is like the engineer who signalized himself by this ungenerous practice. Addison.

ENGINE'RY. n. f. [from engine.]

1. The act of managing artillery.

They may descend in mathematicks to fortification, architecture, engine'ry, or navigation. Milton.

2. Engines of war; artillery.

We saw the toe Approaching, grofs and huge, in hollow cube Training his devilish engine'ry. Milton.

To ENGI'RD. v. a. [from gird.] To encircle; to surround; to environ; to encompass.

My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery;
For what's more miserable than discontent? Shakesp.
That gold must round engirt these brows of mine.
Shakespeare.

ENGLISH. adj. [engler, Saxon.] Belonging to England; thence English is the language of England.

He hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you may come into the court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth in the English. Shakespeare.

Of English tale, the coarser sort is called plaister, or parget; the finer, spoad. Woodward.

To ENGLISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To translate into English.

The hollow instrument terebra, we may english pierce. Bacon.

We find not a word in the text can properly be rendered anise, which is what the Latins call anethum, and properly englished dill. Brown.

To ENGLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French.]

VOL. I.

1. To swallow up. It is now little used in any sense.

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general
Take hold on me: for my particular grief
Engluts and swallows other sorrows. Shakespeare.

Certainly, thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be englutted. Shakesp. Henry V.
How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants
This night englutted! Shakespeare's Timon.

2. To fill.

Whose grieved minds, which choler did englut,
Against themselves turning their wrathful spirit.
Spenser.

3. To glut; to pamper.

Being once englutted with vanity, he will straightway loath all learning. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

To ENGO'RE. v. a. [from gor.] To pierce;
to prick. Not used.

As savage bull, whom two fierce mastiffs bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore, Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives afore. Spens.

To ENGO'RGE. v. a. [from gorge, French, a throat.] To swallow; to devour; to gorge.

Then fraught with rancour and engorg'd ire,
He call at once him to avenge for all. Spenser.

That is the gulf of greediness, they say,
That deep engorgeth all this world is prey. Spenser.

To ENGO'RGE. v. n. To devour; to feed with eagerness and voracity; to riot.

Greedily the engorg'd without restraint,
And knew not eating death? Milton's Par. Lost.

To ENGRA'IL. v. a. [from grele, French, hail.] To variegate; to spot as with hail. A word now used only in heraldry, for to indent in curve lines.

Æacides then shews
A long lance, and a caldron, new engrail'd with twenty hues. Chapman's Iliads.

Polwheel beareth a faultier engrail'd. Carw.

To ENGRA'IN. v. a. [from grain] To die deep; to die in grain.

See thou how fresh my flowers being spread,
Dyed in like white and crimson red,
With leaves engrain'd in lusty green. Spens.

To ENGRAPPLE. v. a. [from grapple.] To close with; to contend with hold on each other.

There shall young Hotspur, with a fury led,
Engrapple with thy son, as fierce as he. Daniel.

To ENGRASP. v. a. [from grasp.] To seize; to hold fast in the hand; to gripe.

Now 'gan Pyrocles wax as wood as he,
And him affronted with impatient might;
And both together fierce engrasped he,
Whiles Guyon standing by, their uncouth strife does see. Spens.

To ENGRA'VE. v. a. preter. engraved; part.
pass. engraved or engraven. [engraver,
French.]

1. To picture by incisions in any matter.

Her ivory forehead, full of bounty brave,
Like a broad table, did itself dispread,
For love his lofty triumphs to engrave,
And write the battles of his great godhead. Fairy Q.
O'er all, the heav'n's refulgent image shines;
On either gate were fix engraven signs. Addison.
Names fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renown'd;
I look'd again, nor could their trace be found. Pope.

2. To mark wood or stone.

Engraves the two stones with the names.
Ex. xxviii. 11.

3. To impress deeply; to imprint.

It will scarce seem possible, that God should en-grave principles, in men's minds, in words of uncertain signification. Locke.

Our Saviour makes this return, fit to be engraven in the hearts of all promoters of charity.
Atterbury.

Sounds which address the ear, are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye,

Lives long upon the mind: the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

4. [from grave.] To bury; to inhumate;
to inter.

The sun had charge of them, now being dead,
In seemly sort their corse to engrave,
And deck with dainty flowers their bridal bed. Spens.

ENGRA'VE. n. f. [from engrave.] A cutter in stone or other matter.

Images are not made in the brain itself, as the pencil of a painter or engraver makes the images in the table, but are imprinted in a wonderful method in the soul. Hale.

To ENGRI'EVE. v. a. [from grieve.] To pain; to vex; to afflict; to disconsolate.

The gnawing anguish, and sharp jealousy,
Which his sad speech infix'd in my breast,
Rankled so sore, and fester'd inwardly,
That my engrieved mind could find no rest. Fairy Q.
Aches, and hurts, and cords, do engrieve either towards rain, or towards frost. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To ENGRO'SS. v. a. [grossir, French.]

1. To thicken; to make thick.

But more happy he than wife,
Of that sea's nature did him not advise;
The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were,
Engross'd with mud, which did them soul agrieve,
That every weighty thing they did upbear. Fairy Q.

2. To encrease in bulk.

Though pillars, by channeling, be seemingly engrossed to our sight, yet they are truly weakened in themselves. Hutton.

3. To fatten; to plump up.

Not sleeping, to engross his idle body;
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul. Shakesp.

4. To seize in the gross; to seize the whole of any thing.

If thou engross'st all the griefs as thine,
Thou robb'st me of a moiety. Shakespeare.
Thosa two great things that so engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

A dog, a parrot, or an ape,
Or some worse brute in human shape,
Engross the fancies of the fair. Swift.

5. To purchase the whole of any commodity for the sake of selling at a high price.

6. To copy in a large hand.

Here is the indictment of the good lord Hastings.
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd. Shakesp.

A clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
Who pens a stanza when he should engross. Pope.

ENGRO'SSER. n. f. [from engross.] He that purchases large quantities of any commodity, in order to sell it at a high price.

A new sort of engrossers, or forestallers, having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen in the woollen manufactures, out of their warehouses, set the price upon the poor landholder.
Locke.

ENGRO'SSMENT. n. f. [from engross.] Appropriation of things in the gross; exorbitant acquisition.

Our thighs are pack'd with wax, our mouths with honey:

We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains! This bitter taste Yield his engrossments to the dying father. Shakesp.

Those held their immoderate engrossments of power and favour by no other tenure than presumption.
Swift.

To ENGUA'RD. v. a. [from guard.] To protect; to defend; to surround as guards.
Not used.

A hundred knights! yes, that on ev'ry dream
He may enguard his dotage with their pow'rs,
And hold our lives at mercy. Shakesp. King Lear.

To ENHA'NCE. v. a. [bausser, enbausser,
French.]

1. To lift up; to raise on high. A sense now obsolete.

ENJ

Both of them high at once their hands enbane'd,
And both at once their huge blows down did sway.

Spenser.

2. To raise; to advance; to heighten in price.

The desire of money is every where the same: its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enbances its price, and increases the scramble. Locke.

3. To raise in esteem.

What is it but the experience of want that enbances the value of plenty? L'Estrange.

The remembrance of the difficulties we now undergo, will contribute to enbance our pleasure.

Atterbury.

4. To aggravate; to increase from bad to worse.

To believe or pretend that whatever our hearts incite is the will of God within us, is the principle of villainy that hath acted in the children of disobedience, enbanced and improved with circumstances of greater impudence than the most abominable heathens were guilty of. Hammond.

The relation which those children bore to the priesthood, contributed to enbance their guilt, and increase their punishment. Atterbury.

ENHANCEMENT. n. f. [from enbance.]

1. Encrease; augmentation of value.

Their yearly rents are not improved, the landlords making no less gain by fines than by enbancement of rents. Bacon.

2. Aggravation; increase of ill.

Jocular slanders have, from the slightness of the temptation, an enbancement of guilt.

Government of the Tongue.

ENIGMA. n. f. [ænigma, Lat. ænyma.]

A riddle; an obscure question; a position expressed in remote and ambiguous terms.

The dark enigma will allow
A meaning; which, if well I understand,
From sacrilege will free the god's command. Dryd.

A custom was amongst the ancients of propoling an enigma at festivals, and adjudging a reward to him that solved it. Pope.

ENIGMATICAL. adj. [from ænigma.]

1. Obscure; ambiguously or darkly expressed.

Your answer, sir, is enigmatical. Shakesp.
Enigmatical deliveries comprehend useful varieties; but being mistaken by liberal expositors at first, they have been misunderstood by most since. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Whilst they affect enigmatical obscurity, they puzzle the readers of their divulged processes. Boyle.

Athenæus gives instances of the enigmatical propositions in use at Athens, and of the forfeitures and rewards upon the solution or nonsolution.

Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Cloudy; obscurely conceived or apprehended.

Faith here is the assent to those things which come to us by hearing, and are so believed by adherence, or dark enigmatical knowledge, but hereafter are seen or known demonstratively. Hammond.

ENIGMATICALITY. adv. [from ænigma.] In a sense different from that which the words in their familiar acceptation imply.

Homer speaks enigmatically, and intends that these monsters are merely the creation of poetry. Broome.

ENIGMATIST. n. f. [from ænigma.] One who deals in obscure and ambiguous matters; maker of riddles.

That I may deal more ingenuously with my reader than the above-mentioned enigmatist has done, I shall present him with a key to my riddle. Addison.

TO ENJOIN. v. a. [enjoindre, French.] To direct; to order; to prescribe. It is more authoritative than direct, and less imperious than command.

To satisfy the good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight
That he'll enjoin me to. Shakesp. Much Ado.

ENL

Monks and philosophers, and such as do continually enjoin themselves. Bacon's Natural History.

It endeavours to secure every man's interest, by enjoining that truth and fidelity be inviolably preserved. Tillotson.

ENJO'INER. n. f. [from enjoin.] One who gives injunctions. Dict.

ENJO'INMENT. n. f. [from enjoin.] Direction; command.

Critical trial should be made by publick enjoinment, whereby determination might be settled beyond debate. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO ENJOY. v. a. [jouir, enjoyir, French.]

1. To feel or perceive with pleasure; to have a pleasing sense of; to be delighted with.

I could enjoy the pangs of death,
And smile in agony. Addison's Cato.

2. To obtain possession or fruition of.

Edward the saint, in whom it pleased God, righteous and just, to let England see what a blessing sin and iniquity would not suffer it to enjoy. Hooker.

He, who, to enjoy

Plato's elysium, leap'd into the sea, Cleombrotus. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To please; to gladden; to exhilarate; to glad; to delight. This sense is usual with the reciprocal pronoun, and is derived from enjoyir.

Creatures are made to enjoy themselves, as well as to serve us. More.

When a man shall, with a sober, sedate, diabolical rancour, look upon and enjoy himself in the sight of his neighbour's sin and shame, can he plead the insatiation of any appetite in nature? South.

TO ENJOY. v. n. To live in happiness.

Then I shall be no more!

And Adam, wedded to another Eve, Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct. Milton.

ENJOYER. n. f. [from enjoy.] One that has fruition or possession. Dict.

ENJOYMENT. n. f. [from enjoy.] Pleasure; happiness; fruition.

His hopes and expectations are bigger than his enjoyments. Tillotson.

TO ENKINDLE. v. a. [from kindle.]

1. To set on fire; to inflame; to put in a flame.

Edmund, enkindle all the sparks of nature
To quit this horrid act. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. To rouse passions; to set the soul into a flame.

Your hand

Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled. Shakespeare.

3. To incite to any act or hope.

Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those who gave the throne of Cawder to me,
Promis'd no less to them?

That, trusted home,

Might yet enkindle you unto the crown. Shakesp.

TO ENLARGE. v. a. [enlargir, French.]

1. To make greater in quantity or appearance.

The wall, in lustre and effect like glass,
Which o'er each object casting various dyes,
Enlarges some, and others multiplies. Pope.

2. To encrease any thing in magnitude; to extend.

Where there is something both lasting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there men will not be apt to enlarge their possessions of land. Locke.

3. To encrease by representation; to magnify; to exaggerate.

4. To dilate; to expand.

O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you,
our heart is enlarged. 2 Cor. vi. 11.

5. To set free from limitation.

Though she appear honest to me, yet at other places

she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her. Shakespeare.

6. To extend to more purposes or uses.

It hath grown from no other root than only a desire to enlarge the necessary use of the word of God, which desire hath begotten an error, enlarging it farther than soundness of truth will bear. Hooker.

7. To amplify; to aggrandise.

This is that science which would truly enlarge men's minds, were it studied. Locke.

Could the mind as in number, come to so small a part of extension or duration as excluded divisibility, that would be the indivisible unit, or idea; by repetition of which it would make its more enlarged ideas of extension and duration. Locke.

8. To release from confinement.

Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person. Shakesp. Henry V.

9. To diffuse in eloquence.

They enlarged themselves upon this subject with all the invidious insinuations they could devise. Clarendon.

TO ENLARGE. v. n.

1. To expatiate; to speak in many words.

They appointed the chancellor of the Exchequer to enlarge upon any of these particulars. Clarendon.

This is a scheme so unpleasant, I delight not to enlarge on it; rather with the memory of it were extinct. Decay of Piety.

2. To be further extended.

The caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have been enlarged, until they fell out among themselves. Raleigh.

ENLARGEMENT. n. f. [from enlarge.]

1. Encrease; augmentation; farther extension.

The king afterwards enlarged the constant obedience of the city with enlargement both of liberties and of revenues. Hayward.

The ocean, which so long our hopes confin'd,
Could give no limits to his vaster mind:
Our bounds enlargement was his latest toil,
Nor hath he left us pris'ners to our idle. Waller.

There never were any islands, or other considerable parcels of land, amassed or heaped up; nor any enlargement, or addition of earth, made to the continent by the mud that is carried down into the sea by the rivers. Woodward.

The commons in Rome generally pursued the enlargement of their power by more set quarrels of one entire assembly against another. Swift.

The Greek tongue received many enlargements between the time of Homer and that of Plutarch. Swift.

2. Release from confinement or servitude.

Lieutenant,

At our enlargement what are thy due fees? Shakesp.
If thou holdest thy peace at the time, then shall their enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place. Esther, iv. 14.

3. Magnifying representation.

And all who told it, added something new;
And all who heard it, made enlargements too. Pope.

4. Expatiating speech; copious discourse.

He concluded with an enlargement upon the vices and corruptions which were got into the army. Clarendon.

ENLARGER. n. f. [from enlarge.] Amplifier; one that encreases or dilates any thing.

We shall not contentiously rejoin, but confer what is in us unto his name and honour, ready to be swallowed in any worthy enlarger. Brown.

TO ENLIGHTEN. v. a. [from light.] To illuminate; to supply with light; to enlighten.

Wisdom from the first has shone on ages past,
Enlightens the present, and shall warm the last. Pope.

TO ENLIGHTEN. v. a. [from light.]

1. To illuminate; to supply with light.

God will enlighten my darkness. Psalms.
As the sun shineth to the whole world, so there is no faith but this one published, the brightness whereof

- whereof must enlighten all that come to the knowledge of the truth. Hooker.
2. To quicken in the faculty of vision.
His eyes were enlightened. Sam.
Love never fails to master what he finds;
The fool enlightens, and the wise he blinds. Dryden.
3. To instruct; to furnish with encrease of knowledge.
This doctrine is so agreeable to reason, that we meet with it in the writings of the enlightened heathens. Spektor.
'Tis he who enlightens our understanding, corrects our wills, and enables us to subdue our affections to the law of God. Reg.
4. To cheer; to exhilarate; to gladden.
5. To illuminate with divine knowledge.
Those who were once enlightened. Hebrews.
- ENLIGHTENER. n. s. [from enlighten.]

- To ENLIVEN. v. a. [from life, live.]
1. To make quick; to make alive; to animate.
2. To make vigorous or active.
These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts and origins of light,
Enliven worlds denied to human light. Prior.
In a glass-house the workmen often fling in a small quantity of fresh coals, which seems to disturb the fire, but very much enlivens it. Swift.
3. To make sprightly or vivacious.
4. To make gay or cheerful in appearance.
- ENLIVENER. n. s. [from enliven.] That which animates; that which puts in motion; that which invigorates.
But fire th' enlivener of the general frame,
Is one, its operation still the same:
Its principle is in itself; while ours
Works, as confederates war, with mingled pow'rs. Dryden.
- To ENLUMINE. v. n. [enluminer, French.] To illumine; to illuminate; to enlighten.
Not in use.
For having yet, in his deducted spright,
Some sparks remaining of that heav'nly fire,
He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,
Unto like goodly semblance to aspire. Spenser.
- ENMITY. n. s. [from enemy; as if enemity, inamity.]
1. Unfriendly disposition; malevolence; aversion.
Their being forced to their books, in an age at enmity with all restraint, has been the reason why many have hated books. Locke.
2. Contrariety of interests or inclinations; mutual malignity.
They shall within this hour,
On a diffention of a doit break out
In bitterest enmity. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Between thee and the woman I will put Enmity; and between thine and her seed:
Her seed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel. Milton.
How far those controversies, and appearing enmities of those glorious creatures, may be carried, is not my business to shew or determine. Dryden.
3. State of opposition.
Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Jam. iv. 4.
You must firmly be convinced, that every sin you commit sets you at enmity with heaven, and will, if not forsaken, render you incapable of it. Waker.
4. Malice; mischievous attempts.
I abjure all rools, and chuse
To wage against the enmity of th' air. Shakespeare.

ENO

- He who performs his duty in a station of great power, must needs incur the utter enmity of many, and the high displeasure of more. Atterbury.
- To ENMARBLE. v. a. [from marble.] To turn to marble; to harden. Obsolete.
Their dying to delay,
Thou do't enmarble the proud heart of her,
Whose love before their life they do prefer. Spenser.
- To ENMESH. v. a. [from mesh.] To net; to entangle; to intrap.
So will I turn her virtue into pitch;
And out of her own goodness make the net
That shall enmesh them all. Shakespeare's Othello.
- To ENPIERCE. v. a. [from pierce.] To transfix.
I am too sore enpierced with his shaft
To soar with his light feathers. Shakespeare.

Prov. xxiv. 19.

4. Commonly with of.
Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree;
Heaven cannot envious of his blessings be. Dryden.

E'NVIOUSLY. adv. [from envious.] With envy: with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duppa.

How enviously the ladies look,
When they surprise me at my book!
And sure as they're alive at night,
As soon as gone, will shew their spight. Swift.

To ENVI'RON. v. a. [environner, French.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.
I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Shakesparr.
The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains. Knolles.

The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.

Within the environing rocks stood the city. Sandys.
Thought following thought, and step by step led on,
He enter'd now the bordering desert wild,
And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton.

God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all our thoughts.
Locke.

2. To involve; to envelope.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make shade!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, 'till mischief and despair Drive you to break your necks. Shakesp. Henry VI.
Since she must go, and I must environ, come, night,
Environ me with darkness whilst I write. Donne.

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besieve; to hem in.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environed me, and howled in mine ears. Shakesp.
In thy danger,

If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer. Shakesp.
I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When straight a barbarous noise environs me. Mih.

4. To inclose; to invest.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all environ. Cleveland.

ENVI'RON. n. s. [environs, French.] The neighbourhood, or neighbouring places round about the country.

To ENUMERATE. v. a. [enumero, Latin.]

- To reckon up singly; to count over distinctly; to number.

You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate the kinds of sin whereof you know yourself guilty.

Wake's Preparation for Death.
Besides enumerating the gross defect of duty to the queen, I shew how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERATION. n. s. [enumeratio, Latin.]

- The act of numbering or counting over;
number told out.

Whoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties, must conclude, that well nigh the business of Christianity is laid on charity. Spratt.

The chemists make spirit, salt, sulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements. Watts.

To ENUNCIATE. v. a. [enuncio, Latin.]

- To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to express.

ENUNCIATION. n. s. [enunciatio, Latin.]

1. Declaration; publick attestation; open proclamation.

Preaching is to strangers and infants in Christ, to produce faith; but this sacramental enunciation is the declaration and confession of it by men in Christ, declaring it to be done, and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Taylor.

2. Intelligence; information.

It remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense; as the conceptions, enun-ciations, and actions of the intellect and will.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Expression.

ENUNCIATIVE. adj. [from enunciate.]

- Declarative; expressive.

This presumption only proceeds in respect of the dispositive words, and not in regard of the enunciative
terms thereof. Ayliffe.

ENUNCIATIVELY. adv. [from enunciative.]

- Declaratively.

E'NVOY. n. s. [envoye, French.]

1. A publick minister sent from one power to another.

Now the Lycian lots conspire
With Phœbus; now Jove's envoy through the air Brings dismal tidings. Denham.
Perseus sent envoys to Carthage to kindle their hatred against the Romans. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. A publick messenger, in dignity below an ambassador.

3. A messenger.

The watchful sentinels at every gate,
At ev'ry passage to the senses, wait;
Still travel to and fro the nervous way,
And their impressions to the brain convey;
Where their report the vital envoys make,
And with new orders are commanded back.
Blackmore.

To E'NVY. v. p. [envier, French; invidere,
Latin.]

1. To hate another for excellence, happiness, or success.

Envy thou not the oppressor, and chuse none of his ways. Prov. iii. 31.

A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.

I have seen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shakespeare.

You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciously.

Jonson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

To E'NVY. v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity: with at.

In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,

Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

He that loves God is not displeased at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts he bestows. Taylor.

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked,
and the success of persecutors? Taylor.

E'NVY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.

Envy is a repining at the prosperity or good of another, or anger and displeasure at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray on the Creation.

Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope.

2. It is used sometimes with of.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shakesp.

3. Sometimes with to.

Many suffered death merely in envy to their vir-tuous and superiour genius. Swift.

4. Rivalry; competition.

You may see the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another. Dryden.

5. Malice; malignity.

Madam, this is a meer distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shakespeare.

6. Publick odium; ill repute; invidiousness.

Edward Plantagenet should be shewed unto the people; to discharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

To ENWHEEL. v. a. [from wheel.]

- To encompass; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakespeare.

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n,
Before, behind thee, and on ev'ry hand
Enwheel thee round. Shakespeare's Othello.

To ENWOMB. v. a. [from womb.]

1. To make pregnant.

Me then he left enwomb'd of this child,
This luckless child, whom thus ye see with blood.
Spenser.

I'm your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwomb'd mine. Shakespeare.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.

Or as the Africk niger stream enwombs
Itself into the earth, and after comes,
Having first made a natural bridge to pass,
For many leagues, far greater than it was;
May't not be said, that her grave shall restore
Her greater, purer, finer than before? Donne.

EO'LIPILE. n. s. [from Æolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe;

which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats,
4 S

heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the waters lying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an colipile, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarefies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

EPACT. n. f. [ἐπακτα.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year: and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 minutes 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days: but 30 being an entire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact; and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten; Thirty reject; the prime makes epact then. Harris.

As the cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Holder.

EP'ULMENT. n. f. [French, from epaule, a shoulder.] In fortification, a sidework made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillion, or mafs of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a cazemate. Harris.

EP'ENTHESIS. n. f. [ἐπ'ενθesis.] [In grammar.] The addition of a vowel or consonant in the middle of a word. Harris.

EP'PHA. n. f. [Hebrew.] A measure among the Jews, containing fifteen solid inches.

The epba and the bath shall be of one measure; that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the epba the tenth part of an homer. Ezekiel.

EPHE'MERA. n. f. [ἐφήμερα.]

1. A fever that terminates in one day.

2. An insect that lives only one day.

EPHE'MERAL. } adj. [ἐφήμερος.] Diurnal; EPHE'MERICK. } beginning and ending in a day.

This was no more than a mere bubble or blast, and like an ephemeral fit of applause. Wotton.

EPHE'MERIS. n. f. [ἐφήμερις.]

1. A journal; an account of daily transactions.

2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.

When casting up his eyes against the light, Both month and day, and hour he measur'd right; And told more truly than the ephemeris; For art may err, but nature cannot miss. Dryden.

EPHE'MERIST. n. f. [from ephemeris.] One who consults the planets; one who studies or practises astrology.

The night before, he was discoursing of and fighting the art of foolish astrologers, and general ephemerists, that pry into the horoscope of mortals. Howell.

EPHEMERON-WORM. n. f. [from ἐφήμερον and worm.] A sort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam observes of the ephemeron-worm; that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the same. Derham.

EPHOD. n. f. [עֶפְדֹּן.] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests. That worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two shoulders were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephod crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breast plate; in which twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. The ephods worn by the other priests were of plain linen. Calmet.

He made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. Exod. xxxix. 2.

Array'd in ephods; nor so few

As are those pearls of morning dew,

Which hang on herbs and flowers. Sandys.

EPIC. adj. [epicus, Latin; ἑπικός.] Narrative; comprising narrations, not acted, but rehearsed. It is usually supposed to be heroick, or to contain one great action achieved by a hero.

Holmes, whose name shall live in epic song,

While music numbers, or while verse has feet. Dryd.

The epic poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the passions. Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epic. Broom.

EPICED'UM. n. f. [ἐπικέδιον.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above shall hear each day

One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;

These, your own anthems, shall become

Your lasting epicedium. Sandys's Paraphrase.

EPICURE. n. f. [epicureus, Latin.] A follower of Epicurus; a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly false thanes,

And mingle with the English epicures. Shakefp.

The epicure buckles to study, when shame, or the desire to recommend himself to his mistress, shall make him uneasy in the want of any sort of knowledge. Locke.

EPICUREAN. adj. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,

Keep his brain fuming; epicurean cooks,

Sharpen with cloysels sauce his appetite. Shakefp.

What a damn'd epicurean rascal is this! Shak.

EPICURISM. n. f. [from epicure.] Luxury; sensual enjoyment; gross pleasure.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and squires;

Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd, and bold,

That this our court, infected with their manners,

Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust

Make it a tavern or a brothel. Shakefp. King Lear.

There is not half so much epicurism in any of their most studied luxuries, as a bleeding fame at their mercy. Government of the Tongue.

Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the greatest sensuality, a piece of epicurism. Calamy's Sermons.

TO EPICURIZE. v. a. [from Epicurus.] To devour like an epicure. A word not used.

While I could see thee full of eager pain

My greedy eyes epicuriz'd on thine. Flatman.

EPICYCLE. n. f. [ἐπίκυκλος and κύκλος.] A little circle whose centre is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper centre. Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or lesser orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal. Brown.

Gird the sphere

With centric and eccentric, scribbled o'er;

Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton's Par. Lost.

EPICYCLOID. n. f. [ἐπικυκλοειδής.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle. Harris.

EPIDEMICAL. } adj. [ἐπιδεμικός.]
EPIDEMICK. }

1. That which falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemic disease, but to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons. Bacon.

As the proportion of epidemic diseases shews the aptness of the air to sudden and vehement impressions, the chronical diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place. Grant.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemic and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions. South.

He ought to have been busied in losing his money, or in other amusements equally laudable and epidemic among persons of honour. Swift.

3. General; universal. Not used, nor proper.

They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all:

Scotland's a nation epidemic. Cleveland.

EPIDERMIS. n. f. [ἐπίδερμις.] The scarf-skin of a man's body.

EPIGRAM. n. f. [epigramma, Latin.] A short poem terminating in a point.

A college of witcrackers cannot shut me out of my humour: do't thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakespeare.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant physician that had been the death of thousands? Peachment of Poetry.

I writ

An epigram that boasts more truth than wit. Gay.

EPIGRAMMATICAL. } adj. [epigrammaticus, EPIGRAMMATICK. } Latin.]

1. Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous foretelling to lie in names. Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit and gross hyperboles; he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines but glares not; and is stately, without ambition. Addison.

He has none of those little points and puerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mixt embellishments of Tasso. Addison.

EPIGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigrammatist for its father, and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector. Pope.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest street twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish. Peachment.

EPIGRAPHIA. n. f. [ἐπιγραφή.] An inscription on a statue. Ditt.

EPILEPSY

EPILEPSY. n. f. [ἐπιληψία.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any part with so great violence, that the mind cannot restrain them. Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepsy:

This is the second fit. Shakespeare's Othello.

Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cachochymia; the phrenitis from cholerick spirits, and the epilepsy from fumes. Flager on the Humours.

EPILEPTIC. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.

A plague upon your epileptick village!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool? Shakesp.

Epilepticks ought to breathe a pure air, unaffected with any steams, even such as are very fragrant. Arbutnot on Diet.

EPILOGUE. n. f. [epilogus, Latin.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. Shakesp.

Are you mad, you dog?

I am to rise and speak the epilogue. Dryden.

EPIPHYCTIS. n. f. [ἐπιφύκτις.] A sore at the corner of the eye.

The epiphyctis is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain. Wifeman's Surg.

EPIPHANY. n. f. [ἐπιφάνεια.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the magi to the place where he was. Dict.

EPIPHONE'MA. n. f. [ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words foregoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. If those preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the isle; who, if they be sincere, may probably groan at the sound. Swift.

EPIPHORA. n. f. [ἐπιφώρα.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a defluxion of humours on the eyes. Harris.

EPIPHYLLOSPE'RMIOUS. adj. [from ἐπιφύλλω and σπέρμα.] Is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves. Harris.

EPIPHYSIS. n. f. [ἐπιφύσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation. Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite. Wifeman.

EPIFLOCE. n. f. [ἐπιφλοκή.] A figure of rhetoric, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another; as, he not only spared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPISCOPACY. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] The government of bishops, the government of the church established by the apostles.

The bishops durst not contest with the assembly in jurisdiction; so that there was little more than the name of episcopacy preserved. Clarendon.

Preley itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever. Ayliffe.

EPI'SCOPAL. adj. [from episcopus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.

The plot of discipline sought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction. Hooker.

2. Vested in a bishop.

The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men. Rogers.

EPI'SCOPATE. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

EPI'SODE. n. f. [ἐπισόδιον.] An incidental narrative, or digression in a poem, separable from the main subject, yet rising naturally from it.

The poem hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject. Addison's Spectator.

EPI'SODICAL. adj. [from episode.] Contained in an episode; pertaining to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the observations of Aristotle. Dryden.

I discover the difference between the episodick and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes. Notes on the Odyssey.

EPI'STICK. n. f. [ἐπιστήκη and ἐπιστήκη.]

1. Drawing.

2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

This matter ought to be solicited to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, episticks, and blistering. Arbutnot.

EPI'STLE. n. f. [ἐπιστολή.] A letter. This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes, She half consents, who silently denies. Dryden.

EPI'STOLARY. adj. [from epistle.]

1. Relating to letters; suitable to letters.

2. Transacted by letters.

I shall carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads. Addison.

EPI'STLER. n. f. [from epistle.] A scribber of letters.

EPI'TAPH. n. f. [ἐπιτάφιος.] An inscription upon a tomb.

Live still, and write mine epitaph. Shakesp.
Some thy lov'd dust in Parian stones enshrine,
Others immortal epitaphs design;
With wit and strength that only yields to thine. Smith.

EPI'THALAMIUM. n. f. [ἐπιθάλμιον.] A nuptial song; a compliment upon marriage.

I presume to invite you to these sacred nuptials: the epithalamium sung by a crowned muse. Sandys.

The forty-fifth psalm is an epithalamium to Christ and the church, or to the lamb and his spouse. Burnet.

EPI'THEM. n. f. [ἐπιθέμα.] A liquid medicament externally applied.

Cordials and epithems are also necessary, to resist the putrefaction and strengthen the vitals. Wifeman.

EPI'THET. n. f. [ἐπιθετον.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head.

I affirm with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous, and villainous, to the author. Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.

The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment. Decay of Piety.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression.

For which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me?—

Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will. Shakespeare.

EPI'TOME. n. f. [ἐπιτομή.] Abridgement; abbreviature; compendious abstract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of your's.

Which, by th' interpretation of full time, May shew like all yourself. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for publick monuments, accuse the industrious writers of delivering much impertinency. Watson.

It would be well, if there were a short and plain epitome made containing the most material heads. Locke.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places. Watson's Improvem. of the Mind.

To EPI'TOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract; to contract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drove into the glasses of your eyes;

So made such mirrors and such spies,

That they did all to you epitomise. Donne.

If the ladies take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature. Addison.

2. Less properly, to diminish by amputation; to curtail.

We have epitomized many particular words to the detriment of our tongue. Addison's Spectator.

EPI'TOMISER. n. f. [from epitomise.] An EPI'TOMIST. n. f. abridger; an abstracter; a writer of epitomes.

EPOCH. n. f. [ἐποχή.] The time at EPO'CHA. n. f. which a new computation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly computes by certain intervals; memorable eras and epochas, or terms of time. Brown.

These are the practices of the world since the year sixty; the grand epoch of falshood, as well as debauchery. South.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease, No action leave to busy chronicles: Such whose supine felicity but makes In story chasms, in epochas mistakes. Dryden.

Their several epochas or beginnings, as from the creation of the world from the flood, from the first olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages. Holder on Time.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world; and from some certain epochas marked out to us by the motions observable in it. Locke.

Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go Through scenes of war, and epochas of woe. Prior.

EPO'DE. n. f. [ἐπώδην.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

EPOPE'E. n. f. [ἐπὶ ὁδῷ.] An epic or heroic poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopee, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own. Dryden's Virgil.

EPULA'TION. n. f. [epulatio, Latin.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EPULO'TICK. n. f. [ἐπιούστιον.] A cicatrifying medicament.

The ulcer, incarned with common sarcoticks, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like epuloticks. Wifeman of Inflamm.

EQUABILITY. n. f. [from equable.] Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wisdom. Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiatics lazy. Arbutnot on Air.
EQUABLE. adj. [æquabilis, Latin.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as the Elysian fields. Bentley.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too slow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony. Arbutnot.

E'QUABLY. adj. [from equable.] Uniformly; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common centre, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances. Cbeysne.

E'QUAL. adj. [æqualis, Latin.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them. Ecclesi.

Equal lot
May join us; equal joy, as equal love. Milton.

Although there were no man to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles. Hale.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers as equal to fight with the English. Clarendon.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears,
At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears;
An equal temper in his mind he found,
When fortune flatter'd him, and when she frown'd. Dryden.

Think not of me, perhaps my equal mind
May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me. Smith.

4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendation equal to your merit. Dryden's Fab. Dedication.

5. Impartial; neutral.

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall;
Equal and unconcern'd I look on all:
Rustilians, Trojans, are the same to me,
And both shall draw the lots their fates decree. Dryden's Æn.

6. Indifferent.

They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me. Cbeysne's Phil. Prin.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He submitted himself, and swore to all equal conditions. Mac.

8. Being upon the same terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves. Mac.

E'QUAL. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferior or superior to another.

He is enamoured on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth. Shakespeare's Much Ado.

He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome. 2 Mac. ix. 15.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superior; and those who were once his superiors, because they look upon him as their equal. Addison.

To my dear equal in my native land,
My plighted vow I gave: I his received:
Each swore with truth, with pleasure each believ'd:
The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd. Prior.

2. One of the same age.

I profited in the Jews religion above many my equals in mine own nation. Gal. i. 14.

TO EQUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another.

2. To rise to to the same state with another person.

I know no body so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote most of them, as yourself. Trumbull to Pope.

3. To be equal to.

One whole all not equals Edward's moiety. Shakespeare.

4. To recompense fully; to answer in full proportion.

She fought Sicheus through the shady grove,
Who answer'd all her cares, and equal'd all her love. Dryden.

Nor you great queen, these offices repent,
Which he will equal, and perhaps augment. Dryd.

TO E'QUALISE. v. a. [from equal]

1. To make even.

To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture. Bro.

2. To be equal to: a sense not used.

That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is. Digby.

Ye lofty beeches tell this matchless dame,
That if together ye fed all one flame,
It could not equalise the hundredth part
Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart. Waller.

EQUALITY. n. s. [from equal.]

1. Likeness with regard to any quantities compared.

Equality of two domestick powers,
Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakesp. Antb. and Cleop.

2. The same degree of dignity.

One shall rise,
Of proud ambition; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton's Paradise Lost.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependance. Swift.

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability.

Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

E'QUALLY. adv. [from equal.]

1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike.

To reconcile men's vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended by atheism and immorality. Rogers.

The covetous are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteousness, as if they were indeed poor. Rogers.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly.

If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes slow, and at others swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does. Lacke.

3. Impartially.

We shall use them,
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakespeare's King Lear.

E'QUALNESS. n. s. [from equal.] Equality.

Let me lament
That our stars unreconcilable should have divided
Our equalness to this. Shakespeare.

EQUANGULAR. adj. [from æquus and angulus, Latin.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANIMITY. n. s. [æquanimitas, Lat.]

Evenness of mind, neither elated nor depressed.

EQUANIMOUS. adj. [æquanimis, Lat.] Even; not dejected; not elated.

EQUATION. n. s. [æquare, Lat.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of excess and defect, to be applied to the whole.

We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the Ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or subtraction, as the case shall require. Holder on Time.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending in its passage from the sun to us about seven minutes of time. Newton's Opticks.

EQUATION. [In algebra.] Is an expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as $3s = 35d$. DiD.

EQUATION. [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted. DiD.

EQUATOR. n. s. [æquator, Lat.] The equator on the earth, or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles: neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator. Brown's Vulg. Err.

On the other side the equator there is much land still remaining undiscovered. Ray on the Creation.
Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a bursting stream auriferous plays. Thomson.

EQUATORIAL. adj. [from equator.] Pertaining to the equator; taken at the equator.

The planets have spheroidal figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their ecliptick planes. Cbeysne.

E'QUERRY. n. s. [ecurie, Dutch.] Master of the horse.

EQUICRURAL. adj. [æquus and crus, Latin.]

1. Having legs of an equal length.

2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the base; isosceles.

An equicrural triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth. Digby on the Soul.

We successively draw lines from angle to angle until seven equicrural triangles be described. Brown.

EQUIDISTANT.

EQUIDISTANT. adj. [equus and distans, Latin.] At the same distance.

EQUIDISTANTLY. adv. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.

The first stars are not all placed in the same concave superficies, and equidistant from us, as they seem to be. Ray.

The liver, seated on the right side, by the subclavian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm. Brown.

EQUIFORMITY. n. f. [æquus and forma, Latin.] Uniform equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EQUILATERAL. adj. [æquus and latus, Latin.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser. Bacon.

Trifling utility appears in their twelve signs of the zodiac and their aspects: why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures? Bentley.

To EQUILIBRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affrication been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetick needle. Boyle's Experiments.

The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with the water in which they swim. Arbutnot on Air.

EQUILIBRATION. n. f. [from equilibrate.] Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

In so great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are observed. Derham.

EQUILIBRIUM. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Equipoise; equality of weight.
2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

Things are not left to an equilibrium, to hover under an indifference whether they shall come to pass, or not come to pass. South.

It is in equilibrium
If deities descend or no;
Then let th' affirmative prevail,
As requisite to form my tale. Prior.

Health consists in the equilibrium between those two powers, when the fluids move so equally that they don't press upon the solids with a greater force than they can bear. Arbutnot.

EQUINECESSARY. adj. [æquus and necessarius, Latin.] Needful in the same degree.

For both to give blows and to carry,
In fights, are equinecessary. Handibras.

EQUINOCTIAL. n. f. [æquus and nox, Latin.] The line that encompasses the world at an equal distance from either pole, to which circle when the sun comes, he makes equal days and nights all over the globe; the same with equator.

EQUINOCTIAL. adj. [from equinox.]

1. Pertaining to the equinox.
Thrice th' equinoctial line
He circled; four times cross'd the car of night
From pole to pole, traversing each colure. Milton.

Some say the sun
Was bid turn reins from th' equinoctial road, Like distant breadth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Happening about the time of the equinoxes.

3. Being near the equinoctial line; having the properties of things near the equator.
In vain they cover shades and Thracia's gales;
Pining with equinoctial heat. Philips.

EQUINOCTIALLY. adv. [from equinoctial.] In the direction of the equinoctial.

They may be refrigerated inclanately, or somewhat equinoctially; that is, towards the eastern and western points. Brown.

EQUINOX. n. f. [æquus and nox, Latin.]

1. Equinoxes are the precise times in which the sun enters into the first point of Aries and Libra; for then, moving exactly under the equinoctial, he makes our days and nights equal. This he doth twice a year, about the 21st of March and 23d of September, which therefore are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. Harris.
It ariseth not heliacally about the autumnal equinox. Brown.
The time when this kid was taken out of the womb was about the vernal equinox. Ray.
'Twas now the month in which the world began,
If March beheld the first created man;
And since the vernal equinox, the sun
In Aries twelve degrees or more had run. Dryden.

2. Equality; even measure. Improper.

Do but see his vice;
'Tis to his virtues a just equinox,
The one as long as th' other. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. Equinoctial wind: a poetical use.
The passage yet was good; the wind, 'tis true,
Was somewhat high, but that was nothing new,
No more than usual equinoxes blew. Dryden.

EQUINUMERANT. adj. [æquus and numerus, Latin.] Having the same number; consisting of the same number.

This talent of gold, though not equinumerant, nor yet equiponderant, as to any other; yet was equivalent to some correspondent talent in brass. Arbutnot on Coins.

To EQUIP. v. a. [equipper, French.]

1. To furnish for a horseman or cavalier.
2. To furnish; to accoutre; to dress out.
The country are led astray in following the town;
and equipped in a ridiculous habit, when they fancy themselves in the height of the mode. Addison.

EQUIPAGE. n. f. [equipage, French.]

1. Furniture for a horseman.
2. Carriage of state; vehicle.
Winged spirits, and chariots wing'd,
From th' armory of God; where stand of old Myriads, between two brazen mountains lodg'd
Against a solemn day, harness'd at hand, Celestial equipage! Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Attendance; retinue.
Soon as thy dreadful trumpet begins to sound,
The god of war, with his fierce equipage,
Thou dost awake, sleep never he so sound. Fairy Q.
I will not lend thee a penny.—
I will retort the sum in equipage. Shakespeare.
Think what an equipage thou hast in air,
And view with scorn two pages and a chair. Pope.

4. Accoutrements; furniture.

EQUIPAGED. adj. [from equipage.] Accoutred; attended; having fine habits; having splendid retinue.

She forth issued with a goodly train
Of squires and ladies, equipaged well,
And entertained them right fairly, as befall. Spenser.

And equity exil'd your highness' lands. Shakesp.

Christianity secures both the private interest of men and the publick peace, enforcing all justice and equity. Tillotson.

2. Impartiality.

Liking their own somewhat better than other men, even because they are their own, they must in equity allow us to be like unto them in this affection. Hooker.

3. [In law.] The rules of decision observed by the court of Chancery, as distinct from the literal maxims of law.

EQUIVALENCE. } n. f. [æquus and valeo, Latin.]

EQUIVALENCY. } Equality of power or worth.

Must the servant of God be assured that which he nightly prays for shall be granted? Yes, either formally or by way of equivalence, either that or something better. Hammond.

That there is any equivalence or parity of worth betwixt the good we do to our brother, and the good we hope for from God, all good Protestants do deny. Smalridge.

Civil causes are equivalent unto criminal causes, but this equivalency only respects the careful and diligent admission of proofs. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To EQUIVALENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To equiponderate; to be equal to.

Whether the transgression of Eve seducing did not exceed Adam seduced, or whether the refutability of his reason did not equivalence the facility of her seduction, we shall refer to schoolmen. Brown.

EQUIVALENT. adj. [æquus and valens, Latin.]

1. Equal in value.

EQU

Things

Well nigh equivalent, and neighb'ring value,
By lot are parted; but the value, high heaven, thy Share,
In equal balance laid with earth and hell,
Flings up the adverse scale, and shuns proportion.

Prior.

2. Equal in any excellence.

No fair to thine

Equivalent, or second! which compell'd
Me thus, though importune perhaps, to come
And gaze, and worship thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The dread of Israel's foes, who, with a strength
Equivalent to angels, walk'd their streets, None offering fight. Milton's Agonistes.

4. Of the same cogency or weight.

The consideration of publick utility is, by very good advice, judged at the least the equivalent to the easier kind of necessity. Hooker.

5. Of the same import or meaning.

The use of the word minister is brought down to the literal signification of it, a servant; for now to serve and to minister, servile and ministerial, are terms equivalent. South.

EQUIVALENT. n. s. A thing of the same weight, dignity, or value.

The slave without a ransom shall be sent;
It rests for you to make th' equivalent. Dryden.
Fancy a regular obedience to one law will be a full equivalent for their breach of another. Bogers.

EQUIVOCAL. adj. [equivocus, Latin.]

1. Of doubtful signification; meaning different things, standing for different notions.

These sentences to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal. Shaksp.
Words of different significations taken in general, are of an equivocal sense; but being considered with all their particular circumstances, they have their sense restrained. Stillingfleet.

The greater number of those who held this were misguided by equivocal terms. Swift.

2. Uncertain; doubtful; happening different ways.

Equivocal generation is the production of plants without seed, or of insects or animals without parents, in the natural way of coition between male and female; which is now believed never to happen
but that all bodies are univocally produced. Harris.

There is no such thing as equivocal or spontaneous generation; but all animals are generated by animal parents of the same species with themselves.

Ray.

Those half-learn'd withings, num'rous in our isle
As half-form'd insects on the Banks of Nile;
Unfinish'd things, one knows not what to call,
Their generation's so equivocal. Pope.

EQUIVOCAL. n. s. Ambiguity; word of doubtful meaning.

Shall two or three wretched equivocals have the force to corrupt us? Dennis.

EQUIVOCALITY. adv. [from equivocal.]

Words abstracted from their proper sense and sig-nification, lose the nature of words, and are only equivocally so called. South.

2. By uncertain or irregular birth; by equivocal generation; by generation out of the stated order.

No insect or animal did ever proceed equivocally
from putrefaction, unless in miraculous cases; as in Egypt by the divine judgments. Bentley.

EQUIVOCALNESS. n. s. [from equivocal.]

Ambiguity; double meaning.
Distinguish the equivocalness or lassitude of the word, and then point out that determinate part which is the ground of my demonstration. Norris.

To EQUIVOCATE. v. n. [equivocatio, Latin.] To use words of double meaning; to use ambiguous expressions; to mean one thing and express another.

ERE

Not only Jesuits can equivocate.
My soul disdain'd a promise;—
—But yet your false equivocating tongue,
Your looks, your eyes, your every motion promis'd:
But you are ripe in fraude, and learn'd in fallhoods.

Dryden.

EQUIVOCATION. n. s. [equivocatio, Latin.]

Ambiguity of speech; double meaning.

Reproof is easily misapplied, and, through equivocation wrested. Hooker.

I pull in resolution and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend
That lies like truth. Shakspere's Macbeth.

EQUIVOCATOR. n. s. [from equivocate.]

One who uses ambiguous language; one who uses mental reservation.

Here's an equivocator, that could swear in both thescales against either scale; yet could not equivocate to Heaven. Shaksp.

Er, a syllable in the middle of names or places, comes by contraction from the Saxon para, dwellers. Gibson's Camden.

ERA. n. s. [æta, Latin.] The account of time from any particular date or epoch.

From the blessings they bestow
Our times are dated, and our eras move:
They govern, and enlighten all below,
As thou do'st all above.

ERADICATION. n. s. [e and radius, Latin.]

Emission of radiance.

God gives me a heart humbly to converse with him, from whom alone are all the eradiations of true majesty. K. Charles.

written er, as if from ever. It is likewise written or before ever, on and ær in Saxon being indiscriminately written. Mr.
Lye. Before; sooner than.

Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand. Shak.

The lions brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came to the bottom of the den. Daniel.

Just trial, ere I merit

My exaltation without change or end. Milton.

The mountain trees in distant prospect please,
Ere yet the pine descended to the seas;

Ere sails were spread new oceans to explore. Dryden.

The birds shall cease to tune their evening song,

ERE

The winds to breathe, the waving woods to move,
And streams to murmur, ere I cease to love. Pope.

ERE. prep. Before.

Our fruitful Nile

Flow'd ere the wonted season. Dryden.

ERELONG. adv. [from ere and long.] Before a long time had elapsed. Nec longum tem- pus.

The anger already began to paint revenge in many colours, erelong he had not only gotten pity but pardon. Sidney.

The wild horse having enmity with the stag, came to a man to desire aid, who mounted upon his back, and following the stag, erelong slew him.

Spenser on Ireland.

Nothing is lasting that is feigned: it will have another face than it had erelong. Ben Jonson.

They swim in joy,

*Ere*long to swim at large, and laugh, for which
The world erelong a world of tears must weep.

Milton.

I saw two stock-doves billing, and erelong

Will take the nest. Dryden's Virgil.

It pleases me to think, that I who know so small a portion of the works of the Creator, and with slow and painful steps creep up and down on the surface of this globe, shall erelong shoot away with the swiftness of imagination, and trace the springs of nature's operations. Spenser.

ERENOW. adv. [from ere and now.] Before this time.

Ah, gentle soldiers, some short time allow;

My father has repented him erenow. Dryd.

Had the word eternally been, science had been brought to perfection long erenow. Cheyne.

EREWHILE. } adv. [from ere and while.]

EREWHILES. } Some time ago; before a little while.

I am as fair now as I was erewhile:

Since night you lov'd me, yet since night you left me.

Shaksp.

We sit down to our meals, suspect not the intrusion of armed uninvited guests, who erewhiles, we know were wont to surprise us. Deay of Piety.

There are many monuments erected to benefactors to the republick. Addison on Italy.

4. To establish anew; to settle.

Great difference there is between their proceedings, who erect a new commonwealth which is to have neither regiment nor religion the same that was, and theirs who only reform a decayed state.

Hooker.

He suffers seventy-two distinct nations to be erected out of the first monarchy under distinct governments.

Raleigh.

5. To elevate; to exalt.

I, who am a party, am not to erect myself into a judge. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

I am far from pretending infallibility: that would be to erect myself into an apostle. Locke.

All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him, and have recourse to their own invention, rather than suffer him to erect himself into an author with impunity. Addison.

6. To raise consequences from premises.

From fallacious foundations and misapprehended mediums, men erect conclusions no way inferrible from the premises. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Men being too hasty to erect to themselves general notions and illgrounded theories, find themselves deceived in their stock of knowledge. Locke.

Malebranche erects this proposition, of seeing all things in God, upon their ruin. Locke.

ESCRITTOIR. n. f. [French.] A box with all the implements necessary for writing. Pronounced scritore.

ESCU'AGE. n. f. [from escu, French, a shield.]

Escuage, that is, service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Escuage uncertain is likewise twofold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars so many days. The days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted a sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 15*l.* per annum. Sir Thomas Smith saith, that census equestris is 40*l.* revenue in free lands. If the land extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord but twenty days. The other kind of this escuage uncertain is called Cattleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Escuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services. Cowel.

ES'CULENT. adj. [from esculentus, Latin.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fast five days; but the same man used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he smelled on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlick. Bacon.

ES'CULENT. n. f. Something fit for food.

This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the esculent, as radish and parsnips, it will make the root the greater, and so it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the esculent, by strengthening the root, it will make the fruit also the greater. Bacon's Natural History.

ESPA'LIER. n. f. Trees planted and cut so as to join.

Plant your fairest tulips in places of shelter, and under espaliers. Evelyn's Kalender.

Behold Villario's ten years toil complete, His arbours darken, his espaliers meet. Pope.

ESPA'RCET. n. f. [from medica, or trifolium, Latin.] A kind of faint-foin. A plant. Mortimer.

ESPE'CIAL. adj. [from specialis, Latin.] Principal; chief.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear, His fortunes up. Daniel's Civil War.

ESPE'CIALLY. adv. [from especial.] Principally; chiefly; particularly; in an uncommon degree above any other.

I somewhat marvel, that they especially should think it absurd to oppose church government, a plain matter of action, unto matter of faith, who know that themselves divide the gospel into doctrine and discipline. Hooker.

Would you proceed especially against Caius Marius? Shakespeare.

This delight children take in doing of mischief, but more especially the pleasure they take to put any thing to pain that is capable of it, I cannot persuade myself to be any other than a foreign and introduced disposition. Locke.

4 T Providence

Providence hath planted in all men a natural desire and curiosity of knowing things to come; and such things especially as concern our particular happiness, or the general fate of mankind. Barnes.
ESPERANCE. n. f. [French.] Hope. Not used.

To be worst,
 The lowest, most dejected things of fortune,
 Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Yet there is a credence in my heart,
 An esperance so obstinately strong,
 That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears. Shakesf.

ESPIAL. n. f. [French, from espier.] A spy; a scout; one sent to bring intelligence. Not used.

Those four garrisons, issuing forth at such convenient times as they shall have intelligence, or espial upon the enemy, will drive him from one side to another. Spenser on Ireland.

As he march'd along,
 By your espials were discovered
 Two mightier troops. Shakespeare.

Spials have inform'd me,
 The English in the suburbs close entrench'd, Went through a secret grate. Shakesf. Henry VI.
 She had some secret espials to look abroad for graceful youths, to make Plantagenets.

Bacon's Henry VII.

ESPLANADE. n. f. [French.] In fortification, the same with the glacis of the counterscarp originally; but now it is taken for the empty space between the glacis of a citadel and the first houses of the town. Harris.

3. To marry; to wed.

Lavinia will I make my emperess,
 And in the sacred Pantheon her epouse.

Shakespeare's Tit. Andr.

With flowers, garlands, and sweet smelling herbs,
Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed. Milton.
 They soon espous'd; for they with ease were join'd,
 Who were before contracted in the mind. Dryden.

If her fire approves,
 Let him espouse her to the peer she loves. Pope.

4. To adopt; to take to himself.

In gratitude unto the duke of Bretagne for his former favours, he espoused that quarrel, and declared himself in aid of the duke. Bacon's Henry VII.

5. To maintain; to defend.

Their gods did not only interest themselves in the event of wars, but also espoused the several parties in a visible corporeal descent. Dryden's Juv. Dedie.

The city, army, court, espouse my cause. Dryden.
 Men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion, and then seek arguments either to make good their beauty, or varnish over their deformity. Locke.

The righteousness of the best cause may be overbalanced by the iniquities of those that espouse it.

Swalbridge.

'The cause of religion and goodness, which is the cause of God, is our's by descent, and we are doubly bound to espouse it.

Asterbury.

To ESPY. v. a. [espier, French.]

ESQUIRE. n. f. [escuer, French.] See SQUIRE.

1. The armour-bearer or attendant on a knight.

2. A title of dignity, and next in degree below a knight. Those to whom this title is now of right due, are all the younger sons of noblemen, and their heirs male for ever; the four esquires of the king's body; the eldest sons of all baronets; so also of all knights of the Bath, and knights batchelors, and their heirs male in the right line; those that serve the king in any worshipful calling, as the serjeant chirurgion, serjeant of the ewry, master cook, &c. such as are created esquires by the king with a collar of S. S. of silver, as the heralds and serjeants at arm. The chief of some ancient families are likewise esquires by prescription; those that bear any superior office in the commonwealth, as high sheriff of any county, who retains the title of esquire during his life, in respect of the great trust he has had of the posse comitatus. He who is a justice of the peace has it during the time he is in commission, and no longer. Utter barristers, in the acts of parliament for poll-money, were ranked among esquires. Bount.

What, are our English dead?
 —Sir Richard Ketley, Davy Gam, esquire. Shakesf.

To ESSA'Y. v. a. [essayer, French.]

1. To attempt; to try; to endeavour.

While I this unexampled task essay,
 Pass awful gulfs, and beat my painful way,
 Celestial dove, divine assistance bring. Blackmore.
 No conquest she, but o'er herself desir'd;
 No arts essay'd, but not to be admir'd. Pope.

2. To make experiment of.

3. To try the value and purity of metals.

The standard in our mint being now settled, the rules and methods of essaying suited to it should remain unvariable. Locke.

ESSAY. n. f. [from the verb. The accent is used on either syllable.]

1. Attempt; endeavour.

Fruitless our hopes, though pious our essays;
 Yours to preserve a friend, and mine to praise. Smith.

2. A loose sally of the mind; an irregular indigested piece; not a regular and orderly composition.

My essays, of all my other works have been most current. Bacon.

Yet modestly he does his work survey,
 And calls his finish'd poem an essay. Poem to Rose.

3. A trial; an experiment.

This treatise prides itself in no higher a title than that of an essay or imperfect attempt at a subject.

Glanville.

He wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my virtue. Shakespeare.

Repetitions wear us into a liking of what possibly, in the first essay, displeased us. Locke.

4. First taste of any thing; first experiment.

Translating the first of Homer's Iliads, I intended as an essay to the whole work. Dryden's Fab. Pref.

ESSENCE. n. f. [essentia, Latin.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in Winter has an essence; in Summer it has existence also. Watts's Log.

One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;
 Another, blood diffus'd about the heart;
 Another faith, the elements conspire,
 And to her essence each doth give a part. Davies.

I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence.

Mor's Divine Dialogues.

He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.

The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of Christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular Christian man. Hooker.

3. Existence; the quality of being.

In such cogitations have I stood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence. Sidney.

4. Being; existent person.

As far as gods, and heav'nly essences
 Can perish. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. Species of existent being.

Here be four of your as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends: as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion he may be the fifth essence. Bacon.

6. Constituent substance.

For spirits when they please,
 Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
 And uncompound'd is their essence pure;
 Not ty'd or manacled with joint or limb. Milton.

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.

She is my essence; and I leave to be,
 If I be not by her fair influence
 Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakesf.

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.

9. Perfume; odour; scent.

Our humble province is to 'tend the fair;
 To save the powder from too rude a gale,
 Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale. Pope.

To ESSENCE. v. a. [from essence.] To perfume; to scent.

The husband rails, from morning to night, at essenced fops and tawdry courtiers. Addison's Spect.

ESSENTIAL. adj. [essentialis, Latin.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.

The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.

From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Spratt.

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immaterial and divine power. Bentley.

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion; but conceals an essential circumstance, upon on which the whole weight of the matter turns.

And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to th' am'g whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall. Pope.

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.

Judgment's more essential to a general,
Than courage. Denham's Sophy.

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtilely elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

The juice of the seed is an essential oil or balm, Designed by nature to preserve the seed from corruption. Arbutnot.

1. Existence; being.

His utmost ire to the height enrag'd,
Will either quite consume us, or reduce To nothing this essential. Milton's Paradise Lost.

All happy peace, and goodly government,
Is settled there in sure establishment. Fairy Queen.

2. Confirmation of something already done; ratification.

He had not the act penned by way of recognition of right; as, on the other side, he avoided to have it by new law; but chose rather a kind of middle way, by way of establishment. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Settled regulation; form; model of a government or family.

Now come into that general reformation, and bring in that establishment by which all men should be contained in duty. Spenser.

4. Foundation; fundamental principle; settled law.

The sacred order to which you belong, and even the establishment on which it subsists, have often been struck at; but in vain. Atterbury.

5. Allowance; income; salary.

His excellency, who had the sole disposal of the emperor's revenue, might gradually lessen your establishment. Swift.

6. Settled or final rest.

Whilst we set up our hopes and establishment here, we do not seriously consider that God has provided another and better place for us. Wake.

ESTATE. n. f. [estat, French.]

1. The general interest; the business of the government; the publick. In this sense it is now commonly written state.

Many times the things adduced to judgment may be meum & tuum, when the reason and consequences thereof may reach to point of estate: I call matters of estate not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent, or concerneth manifestly any great portion of people. Bacon's Essays.

2. Condition of life, with regard to prosperity or adversity.

Thanks to giddy chance,
She cast us headlong from our high estate. Dryden.

3. Condition; circumstances in general.

Truth and certainty are not at all secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain, floating estate with as without them. Locke.

4. Fortune; possession: generally meant of possessions in land, or realities.

She accused us to the king, as though we went about to overthrow him in his own estate. Sidney.

Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul;
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole,
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See what a vast estate he left his son! Dryd. Pers.

5. Rank; quality.

Who hath not heard of the greatness of your estate? Who seeth not that your estate is much excelled with that sweet uniting of all beauties. Sidney.

- ESTRAPADE. n. f. [French.] The defence of a horse that will not obey, who, to get rid of his rider, rises mightily before; and while his forehead is yet in the air, yerks furiously with his hind legs. Farrier's Dict.
- ESTRE'ATE. n. f. [extractum, Latin.] The true copy of an original writing: for example, of amerciaments or penalties, set down in the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff, or other officer, of every man for his offence. A law term. Cowel.
- ESTRE'PEMENT. n. f. [of the French word estrepier.] Spoil made by the tenant for term of life upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in the reversion. Cowel.
- E'STRICH. n. f. [commonly written ostrich; struthiocamelus.] The largest of birds.
To be furious,
Is to be frighted out of fear; and in that mood,
The dove will peck the ostridge. Shakespeare.
The peacock, not at thy command assumes,
His glorious train, nor ostrich her rare plumes. Sandys.
- E'STUANCE. n. f. Heat; warmth. A word rarely found.
Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalcescence, and regulated estruance from wine. Brown.
- E'STUARY. n. f. [æstuarium, Latin.] An arm of the sea; the mouth of a lake or river in which the tide reciprocates; a frith.
- To ESTUATE. v. a. [æstuo, Latin.] To swell and fall reciprocally; to boil; to be in a state of violent commotion. Diſt.
- ESTUATION. n. f. [from æstuo, Latin.] The state of boiling; reciprocation of rise and fall; agitation; commotion.
Rivers and lakes that want fermenting parts at the bottom, are not excited into estuations; therefore some seas flow higher than others. Brown.
The motion of the will is accompanied with a sensible commotion of the spirits, and an estuation of the blood. Norris.
- E'STURE. n. f. [æstus, Latin.] Violence; commotion.
The seas retain
Not only their outrageous esture there,
But supernatural mischief they expire. Chapman.
- ESU'RIENT. adj. [esuriens, Latin.] Hungry; voracious. Diſt.
- E'SURINE. adj. [esurio, Latin.] Corroding; eating.
Over much piercing is the air of Hampstead, in which sort of air there is always something esurine and acid. Wifeman.
- ETC. A contraction of the two Latin

ETE

- words et cætera, which signifies, and so on; and the rest; and others of the like kind.
- To ETCH. v. a. [etzen, German.]
1. A way used in making of prints, by drawing with a proper needle upon a copper-plate, covered over with a ground of wax, &c. and well blacked with the smoke of a link, in order to take off the figure of the drawing or print; which having its backside tintured with white lead, will by running over the stricken out lines with a stiff, impress the exact figure on the black or red ground; which figure is afterwards with needles drawn deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in; and then a wax border being made all round the plate, there is poured on a sufficient quantity of well tempered aqua fortis, which insinuating into the strokes made by the needles, usually eats, in about half an hour, into the figure of the print or drawing on the copper-plate. Harris.
2. To sketch; to draw; to delineate [unless this word be mistaken by Locke for etch.]
There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etch out their systems. Locke.
3. [This word is evidently mistaken by Ray for edge.] To move forwards towards one side.
When we lie long awake in the night, we are not able to rest one quarter of an hour without shifting of sides, or at least etching this way and that way, more or less. Ray.
- ETCH. n. f. A country word of which I know not the meaning.
When they sow their etch crops, they sprinkle a pound or two of clover on an acre. Mortimer.
Where you find dunging of land makes it rank, lay dung upon the etch, and sow it with barley. Mortimer's Husbandry.
- ETE'RNAL. adj. [æternus, Latin.]
1. Without beginning or end.
The eternal God is thy refuge. Deuter. xxxiii. 27.
2. Without beginning.
It is a question quite different from our having an idea of eternity, to know whether there were any real being, whose duration has been eternal? Locke.
3. Without end; endless; immortal.
Thou know'st that Banguo and his Fleance lives,
—But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakespeare.
4. Perpetual; constant; unintermitting.
Burnt off rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temple shine. Dryden.
5. Unchangeable.
Hobbes believed the eternal truths which he opposed. Dryden.
- ETE'RNAL. n. f. [eternel, French.] One of the appellations of the Godhead.
That law whereby the Eternal himself doth work. Hooker.
The Eternal, to prevent such horrid fray, Hung out of heav'n his golden scales. Milton.
- ETE'RNALIST. n. f. [æternus, Latin.] One that holds the past existence of the world infinite.
I would ask the eternalists what mark is there that they could expect to desire of the novelty of a world, that is not found in this? Or what mark is there of eternity that is not found in this? Burnet.
- To ETE'RNALIZE. v. a. [from eternal.] To make eternal. Diſt.
- ETE'RNALLY. adv. [from eternal.]
1. Without beginning or end.
2. Unchangeably; invariably.
That which is morally good, or evil, at any time, or

or in any case, must be also eternally and unchangeably so, with relation to that time and to that case.

South.

3. Perpetually; without intermission.

Bear me, some god, to Baja's gentle seats,
Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride. Addison.

ETERNAL. adj. [eternus, Latin.] Eternal; perpetual; endless.

The Cyclops hammers fall
On Mars his armour, forg'd for proof eternae. Shakes.

ETERNITY. n. f. [Eternitas, Latin.]

1. Duration without beginning or end.

In this ground his precious root
Still lives, which, when weak time shall be pour'd out Into eternity, and circular joys
Dancing an endless round, again shall rise. Crawshaw.

Thy immortal rhyme
Makes this one short point of time,
To fill up half the orb of round Eternity. Cowley.
By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with all the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity.
Locke.

2. Duration without end.

Beyond is all abyss, Eternity, whose end no eye can reach! Milton.
Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untried being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass!
Addison.

TO ETERNIZE. v. a. [eterno, Latin.]

1. To make endless; to perpetuate.

I with two fair gifts
Created him endow'd; with happiness,
And immortality: that fondly lott,
This other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.

Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.

And well befits all knights of noble name,
That covet in th' immortal book of fame
To be eternized, that fame to haunt. Fairy Queen.

I might relate of thousands, and their names
Eternize here on earth; but those elect
Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n, Seek not the praise of men. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own. Temple.

Both of them are set on fire by the great actions of heroes, and both endeavour to eternize them.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Creech seems to have accented the first syllable.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove Hath eterniz'd the glory of his love. Creech's Manil.

ETHER. n. f. [ether, Latin; αιθερ.]

1. An element more fine and subtle than air; air refined or sublimed.

If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know that this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding smallness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force by which those particles may recede from one another. Newton.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union.
Locke.

2. The matter of the highest regions above.

There fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.
Dryden.

ETHEREAL. adj. [from ether.]

1. Formed of ether.

Man feels men when I press th' etereal plains.
Dryden.

2. Celestial; heavenly.

ETY

Go heavenly guest, etereal messenger,
Sent from whose sovereign goodness I adore. Milton.

Thrones and imperial pow'rs, offspring of Heaven, Ethereal virtues! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such as these, being in good part freed from the entanglements of sense and body, are employed, like the spirits above, in contemplating the Divine Wisdom in the works of nature; a kind of anticipation of the etereal happiness and employment.
Glanville.

Vast chain of being, which from God began,
Natures etereal, human; angel, man. Pope.

ETHEREOUS. adj. [from ether.] Formed of ether; heavenly.

Behold the bright surface
Of this etereous mould, whereon we stand. Milton.

ETHICAL. adj. [ηθικ.] Moral; treating on morality.

ETHICALLY. adj. [from ethical.] According to the doctrines of morality.

My subject leads me not to discourse ethically, but Christianly of the faults of the tongue.
Government of the Tongue.

ETHICK. adj. [ηθικ.] Moral; delivering precepts of morality. Whence Pope entitled part of his works Ethick Epistles.

ETHICKS. n. f. without the singular.
[ηθικη.] The doctrine of morality; a system of morality.

For of all moral virtues, she was all
That ethicks speak of virtues cardinal. Donne.

I will never set politicks against ethicks; for true ethicks are but as a handmaid to divinity and religion. Bacon.

Perfius professes the stoick philosophy; the most generous amongst all the sects who have given rules of ethicks. Dryden.

If the atheists would live up to the ethicks of Epicurus himself, they would make few or no profelytes from the Christian religion. Bentley.

ETHNICK. adj. [ηθικ.] Heathen; Pagan; not Jewish; not Christian.

Such contumely as the ethick world durst not offer him, is the peculiar insolence of degenerated Christians. Gov. of the Tongue.

I shall begin with the agreement of profane, whether Jewish or ethick, with the Sacred Writings. Grew.

ETHNICKS. n. f. Heathens; not Jews; not Christians.

This first Jupiter of the ethnicks was then the same Cain, the son of Adam. Raleigh's History.

ETHOLOGICAL. adj. [ηθικ and λογικ.]
Treating of morality.

ETIOLOGY. n. f. [αιτιολογια.] An account of the causes of any thing, generally of a distemper.

I have not particulars enough to enable me to enter into the etiology of this distemper. Arbuthnot.

ETYMOLOGICAL. adj. [from etymology.] Relating to etymology; relating to the derivation of words.

Excuse this conceit, this etymological observation.
Locke.

ETYMOLOGIST. n. f. [from etymology.]
One who searches out the original of words; one who shows the derivation of words from their original.

ETMOLOGY. n. f. [etymologia, Lat.
ἔτυμος and λογικ.]

1. The descent or derivation of a word from its original; the deduction of formations from the radical word; the analysis of compound words into primitives.

Consumption is generally taken for any universal diminution and colliquation of the body which accep-tation its etymology implies.
Harvey on Consumptions.

When words are restrained, by common usage, to a particular sense, to run up to etymology, and

EVA

construe them by dictionary, is wretchedly ridiculous. Collier's View of the Stage.

Pelvis is used by comick writers for a lookingglass, by which means the etymology of the word is visible, and pelvidera will signify a lady who looks in her glass. Addison's Spectator.

If the meaning of a word could be learned by its derivation or etymology, yet the original derivation of words is oftentimes very dark. Watts's Log.

2. The part of grammar which delivers the inflections of nouns and verbs.

ETYMON. n. f. [ἔτυμον.] Origin; primitive word.

Blue hath its etymon from the High Dutch blaw; from whence they call hemmel-blue, that which we call sky-colour or heaven's blue. Peacbam.

TO EVA'CATE. v. a. [vaco, Latin.] To empty out; to throw out.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disin-carcerate venene bodies, or to evacuate them.
Harvey on the Plague.

TO EVA'CUATE. v. a. [evacuo, Latin.]

1. To make empty; to clear.

There is no good way of prevention but by evacuating clean, and emptying the church. Hooker.

We tried how far the air would manifest its gravity in so thin a medium, as we could make in our receiver, by evacuating it. Boyle.

2. To throw out as noxious, or offensive.

3. To void by any of the excretory passages.

Boerhaave gives an instance of a patient, who by a long use of whey and water, and garden fruits, evacuated a great quantity of black matter, and recovered his senses. Arbuthnot.

4. To make void; to evacuate; to nullify; to annul.

The defect, though it would not evacuate a marriage, after cohabitation and actual consummation;
yet it was enough to make void a contract.
Bacon's Henry VII.

If the prophecies recorded of the Messiah are not fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, it is impossible to know when a prophecy is fulfilled, and when not, in any thing or person whatsoever, which would utterly evacuate the use of them. South.

5. To quit; to withdraw from out of a place.

As this neutrality was never observed by the em-perour, so he never effectually evacuated Catalonia.
Swift.

EVA'CUANT. n. f. [evacuans, Latin.] Medicine that procures evacuation by any passage.

EVACUA'TION. n. f. [from evacuate.]

1. Such emissions as leave a vacancy; discharge.

Consider the vast evacuations of men that England hath had by assistances lent to foreign kingdoms. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Abolition; nullification.

Papery hath not been able to re-establish itself in any place, after provision made against it, by utter evacuation of all Romish ceremonies. Hooker.

3. The practice of emptying the body by physick.

The usual practice of physick among us, turns in a manner wholly upon evacuation, either by bleeding, vomit, or some purgation. Temple.

4. Discharges of the body by any vent natural or artificial.

TO EVA'DE. v. a. [evado, Latin.]

1. To elude; to escape by artifice or stratagem.

In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannick power: if he evade us there,
Inforce him with his envy to the people. Shakespeare.

If thou covet death as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He might evade the accomplishment of these afflictions he now gradually endureth. Brown.

E V A

2. To avoid; to decline by subterfuge.

Our question thou evad'st; how did'st thou dare
To break hell bounds? Dryden's State of Innocence.

3. To escape or elude by sophistry.

My argument evidently overthrows all that he brings to evade the testimonies of the fathers.

Stillingfleet.

4. To escape as imperceptible or unconquerable, as too great or too subtle to be seized or subdued.

We have seen how a contingent even baffles man's knowledge, and evades his power.

South.

To EVA'DE. v. n.

1. To escape; to slip away. It is not now used with from.

His wisdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers, than into a providence to prevent it.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Unarm'd they might

Have easily, as spirits, evaded swift
By quick contraction, or remove.

Milton.

2. To practise sophistry or evasions.

The ministers of God are not to evade or take refuge in any of these two formentioned ways.

South.

EVAGA'TION. n. f. [evagor, Latin.] The act of wandering; excursion; ramble; deviation.

These long chains of lofty mountains, which run through whole continents east and west, serve to stop the evagation of the vapours to the north and south in hot countries.

Ray.

EVANESCENT. adj. [evanescent, Latin.] Vanishing; imperceptible; lessening beyond the perception of the senses.

The canal grows still smaller and slenderer, so as that the evanescent solid and fluid will scarce differ.

Arbutnot.

The difference between right and wrong, on some petty cases, is almost evanescent.

Wollaston.

The downy orchard, and the melting pulp

Of mellow fruit, the nameless nations feed

Of evanescent insects

Thomson's Spring.

EVANGELICAL. adj. [evangelique, French; evangelicus, Latin.]

1. Agreeable to gospel; consonant to the Christian law revealed in the holy gospel.

This distinction between moral goodness and evangelical perfection, ought to have been observed.

Arbutnot.

God will indeed judge the world in righteousness;
but 'tis by evangelical, not a legal righteousness,
and by the intervention of the man Christ Jesus, who is the Saviour as well as the Judge of the world.

Atterbury.

2. Contained in the gospel.

Those evangelical hymns they allow not to stand in our liturgy.

Hooker.

EVANGELISM. n. f. [from evangel.] The promulgation of the blessed gospel.

Thus was this land saved from infidelity, through the apostolical and miraculous evangelism.

Bacon.

EVANGELIST. n. f. [ευαγγελιστης.]

1. A writer of the history of our Lord Jesus.

Each of these early writers ascribe to the four evangelists by name their respective histories.

Addison.

2. A promulgator of the Christian laws.

Those to whom he first entrusted the promulgating of the gospel, had instructions; and it were fit our new evangelists should show their authority.

Deay of Piety.

To EVA'NGELIZE. v. a. [evangelizo, Latin; ευαγγελίζω.] To instruct in the gospel, or law of Jesus.

The spirit

Pour'd first on his apostles, whom he sends

T' evangelize the nations; then on all

Baptiz'd, shall them with wond'rous gifts endue.

Milton.

E V A

EVA'NGELY. n. f. [ευαγγέλιον, that is, good tidings.] Good tidings; the message of pardon and salvation; the holy gospel; the gospel of Jesus.

Fairy Q.

EVA'NIO. adj. [evanidus, Latin.] Faint; weak; evanescent.

Where there is heat and strength enough in the plant to make the leaves odorate, there the smell of the flower is rather evanid and weaker than that of the leaves.

Bacon.

The decoctions of simples, which bear the visible colours of bodies decocted, are dead and evanid, without the commixtion of allum, argol, and the like.

Brown.

I put as great difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and an evanid meteor.

Glanville.

To EVA'NISH. v. a. [evanesco, Latin.] To vanish; to escape from notice or perception.EVA'PORABLE. adj. [from evaporate.] Easily dissipated in fumes or vapours.

Such cordial powders as are aromattick, their vir-easily evaporable.

Crew.

To EVA'PORATE. v. n. [evapero, Latin.] To fly away in vapours or fumes; to waste insensibly as a volatile spirit.

Poesy is of so subtle a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will evaporate.

Denham.

Our works unhappily evaporated into words; we should have talked less, and done more.

Decay of Piety.

Being weary with attending the slow consumption of the liquor, we set it in a digesting furnace to evaporate more nimbly.

Boyle.

This vapour falling upon joints which have not heat enough to dispel it, cannot be cured otherwise than by burning, by which it evaporates.

Temple.

The enemy takes a surer way to consume us, by letting our courage evaporate against stones and rubbish.

Swift.

To EVA'PORATE. v. a.

1. To drive away in fumes; to disperse in vapours.

If we compute that prodigious mass of water daily thrown into the sea from all the rivers, we should then know how much is perpetually evaporated, and cast again upon the continents to supply those innumerable streams.

Bentley.

Convents abroad are so many retreats for the speculative, the melancholy, the proud, the silent, the politick, and the morose, to spend themselves, and evaporate the noxious particles.

Swift.

We perceive clearly that fire will warm or burn us,
and will evaporate water.

Watts's Logick.

2. To give vent to; to let out in ebullition or sallies.

My lord of Essex evaporated his thoughts in a sonnet to be sung before the queen.

Wotton.

EVAPORA'TION. n. f. [from evaporate.]

1. The act of flying away in fumes or vapours; vent; discharge.

They are but the fruits of adusted choler, and the evaporations of a vindictive spirit.

Howel.

Evaporations are at some times greater, according to the greater heat of the sun; so wherever they alight again in rain, 'tis superior in quantity to the rain of colder seasons.

Woodward.

2. The act of attenuating matter, so as to make it fume away.

Those waters, by rarefaction and evaporation, ascended.

Ral.

3. [In pharmacy.] An operation by which liquids are spent or driven away in steams, so as to leave some part stronger, or of a higher consistence than before.

Quincy.

EVA'SION. n. f. [evasum, Latin.] Excuse;

E V E subterfuge; sophistry; artifice; artful means of eluding or escaping.

We are too well acquainted with those answers;
But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn,
Cannot outfly our apprehensions.

Shakespeare.

Him, after all disputes,

Forc'd I absolve: all my evasions vain,
And reasonings, though through mazes, lead me still
But to my own conviction.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

In vain thou striv'st to cover shame with shame;
Thou by evasions thy crime uncover'st more.

Milt.

EVA'SIVE. adj. [from evade.]

Thus he, though conscious of th' etherial quest,
Answer'd evasive of the fly request.

Pope's Odyssey.

2. Containing an evasion; sophistical; dishonestly artful.

EVA'SIVELY. adv. [from evasive.] By evasion; elusively; sophistically.EUCHARIST. n. f. [ευχαριστία.] The act of giving thanks; the sacramental act in which the death of our Redeemer is commemorated with a thankful remembrance;
the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

Himself did better like of common bread to be used in the eucharist.

Hooker.

Some receive the sacrament as a means to procure great graces and blessings, others as an eucharist and an office of thanksgiving for what they have received.

Taylor.

EUCHARISTICAL. adj. [from eucharisti.]

1. Containing acts of thanksgiving.

The latter part was eucharistical, which began at the breaking and blessing of the bread.

Brown.

It would not be amiss to put it into the eucharistical part of our daily devotions: we praise thee,
O God, for our limbs and senses.

Ray.

2. Relating to the sacrament of the supper of the Lord.

EUCHO'LOGY. n. f. [ευχολόγιον.] A formu-

He was
A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honors even. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
 5. Not having any part higher or lower than the other.
When Alexander demanded of one what was the fittest seat of his empire, he laid a dry hide before him, and desired him to set his foot on one side thereof; which being done, all the other parts of the hide did rise up; but when he did set his foot in the middle, all the other parts lay flat and even. Davies.
 6. Equal on both sides; fair; not favouring either.
Upheld by me, yet once more he shall stand
On even ground against his mortal foe. Milton.
 7. Without any thing owed, either good or ill; out of debt.
We reckon with your several loves;
And make us even with you;
Henceforth be even. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I do confess
The blind lad's pow'r, while he inhabits there;
But I'll be ev'n with him nevertheless. Suckling.
In taking revenge, a man is but even with his enemy, but in passing it over, he is superior.
Bacon's Essays.
Even reckoning makes lasting friends; and the way to make reckonings even is to make them often.
South.
The publick is always even with an author who has not a just deference for them: the contempt is reciprocal. Addison.
The true reason of this strange doctrine was to be even with the magistrate, who was against them;
and they resolved at any rate to be against him.
Atterbury.
 8. Calm; not subject to elevation or depression; not uncertain.
Desires compos'd, affections ever ev'n,
Tears that delight, and sighs that waft to heav'n.
Pope.
 9. Capable to be divided into equal parts; not odd.
Let him tell me whether the number of the stars be even or odd. Taylor's Rule of living holy.
What verity there is in that numeral conceit in the lateral division of man by even and odd, ascribing the odd unto the right side, and even unto the left.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- To EVEN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To make even.
 2. To make out of debt; to put in a state in which either good or ill is fully repaid.
Nothing can, or shall content my soul,
'Till I am evened with him wife for wife. Shakesf.
 3. To level; to make level.
This temple Xerxes evened with the soil, which Alexander is said to have repaired. Raleigh.
Beat, roll, and now carper-walks and camomile;
for now the ground is supple, and it will even all inequalities. Evelyn.
- To EVEN. v. n. To be equal to. Now disused.
A like strange observation taketh place here as at Stonehenge, that a redoubled numbering never eveneth with the first. Carr.
- E'VEN. adv. [often contracted to ev'n.]
1. A word of strong assertion; verily.
Even so did those Gauls possess the coasts. Spenser.
Thou wast a soldier

- Even* to Cato's wish; not fierce, and terrible Only in strokes. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
- Dang'rous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream,
And, in a word, yea even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shakesf.
It is not much that the good man ventures; after this life, if there be no God, he is as well as the bad; but if there be a God, is infinitely better, even as much as unspeakable and eternal happiness is better than extreme and endless misery. Tillotson.
He might even as well have employed his time, as some princes have done, in catching moles. Atter.
2. Notwithstanding; though it was so that.
All I can say for those passages is, that I knew they were bad enough to please even when I wrote them. Dryden.
 3. Likewise; not only so, but also.
The motions of all the lights of heaven might afford measures of time, if we could number them; but most of those motions are not evident, and the great lights are sufficient, and serve also to measure even the motions of those others. Holder.
Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs cease,
And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace. Pope.
 4. So much as.
Books give the same turn to our thoughts that company does to our conversation, without loading our memories, or making us even sensible of the change. Swift.
 5. A word of exaggeration in which a secret comparison is implied; as, even the great, that is, the great like the mean.
Nor death itself can wholly wash your stains,
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains.
Dryden.
I have made several discoveries which appear new,
even to those who are versed in critical learning.
Addison's Spectator.
 6. A term of concession.
Since you refined the notion, and corrected the malignity, I shall ev'n let it pass. Collier.

Dutch.] The close of the day; the beginning of night.
I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
The devil is now more laborious than ever, the long day of mankind drawing towards an evening, and the world's tragedy and time near at an end. Raleigh.
Mean time the sun descended from the skies,
And the bright evening star began to rise. Dryden.
It was the sacred rule among the Pythagoreans, that they should every evening thrice run over the actions and affairs of the day. Watts on the Mind.
- E'VENLY. adj. [from even.]
1. Equally; uniformly; in an equipoise.
In an infinite chaos nothing could be formed; no particles could convene by mutual attraction; for every one there must have infinite matter around it, and therefore must rest for ever, being evenly balanced between infinite attractions. Bentley.
 2. Levelly; without asperities.
A palish clearness, evenly and smoothly spread;
not overthin and wat'ry, but of a pretty solid consistence. Wolton.
 3. Without inclination to either side; in a posture parallel to the horizon; horizontally.
The upper face of the sea is known to be level by nature, and evenly distant from the centre, and waxes deeper and deeper the farther one saileth from the shore. Brerewood.
 4. Impartially; without favour or enmity.
You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince: it behoves you to sarry yourself wisely and evenly between them both.
Bacon's Advice to Children.

- E'VENNESS. n. s. [from even.]
1. State of being even.

that evenness and celerity is requisite in them all.
Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.
 3. Equality of surface; equal respect.
 4. Freedom from inclination to either side.
A crooked stick is not straitened, unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that so it may settle itself at the length in a middle state of evenness between both. Hooker.
 5. Impartiality; equal respect.
 6. Calmness; freedom from perturbation.
Though he appeared to relish these blessings as much as any man, yet he bore the loss of them, when it happened, with great composure and evenness of mind. Atterbury.
- E'VENSONG. n. s. [even and song.]
1. The form of worship used in the evening.
Thee, 'chantress of the woods among,
I woo to hear thy evensong. Milton.
If a man were but of a day's life, it is well if he lasts 'till evensong, and then says his complint an hour before the time. Taylor.
 2. The evening; the close of the day.
He tun'd his notes both evensong and morn.
Dryden.
- EVEN'TIDE. n. s. [even and tide.] The time of evening.
A swarm of gnats at eventide,
Out of the fens of Allan do arise,
Their murmuring small trumpets sounding wide.

Isaac went out to meditate at the eventide.
Gen. xxiv. 63.
- EVE'NT. n. s. [eventus, Latin.]
1. An incident; any thing that happens, good or bad.
There is one event to the righteous and to the wicked. Eccles.
Oh heavy times, begetting such events! Shakesp.
 2. The consequence of an action; the conclusion; the upshot.
Two spears from Meleager's hand were sent,
With equal force but various in th' event;
The first was fix'd in earth, the second stood On the boar's bristled back, and deeply drank his blood. Dryd.
- To EVE'NTERATE. v. a. [eventero, Latin.]
To rip up; to open by ripping the belly.
In a bear, which the hunters eventerated, or opened, I beheld the young ones, with all their parts distinct. Brown.
- EVE'NTFUL. adj. [event and full.] Full of incidents; full of changes of fortune.

disobliged you; and hath made your flame a better return, by restoring you your own heart. Boyle.
- E'VER. adv. [æfre, Saxon.]
1. At any time.
Men know by this time, if ever they will know, whether it be good or evil which hath been so long retained. Hooker.
If thou hast that, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever, I mean valour, this might shew it. Shakespeare.
You serve a master who is as free from the envy of friends, as ever any king was. Bacon.

So few translations deserve praise, that I scarce ever saw any which deserved pardon. Denham.

The most sensual man that ever was in the world never felt so delicious a pleasure as a clear conscience.
Tillotson.

By repeating any idea of any length of time, as of a minute, a year, or an age, as often as we will in our own thoughts, and adding them to one another, without ever coming to the end of such addition, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. At all times; always; without end.

God hath had ever, and ever shall have, some church visible upon the earth. Hooker.

I see things may serve long, but not serve ever.
Shakespeare.

nature, though every thing is altered. Dryden.

Ever since that time Lyfander has been at the house. Tatler.

Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow
The poets bays and crick's ivy grow,
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame. Pope.

3. For ever. Eternally; to perpetuity.

Men are like a company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other kinds of viands; which, having enjoyed for a season, they cease to be, and exist no more for ever. Locke.

We'll to the temple: there you'll find your son;
And there be crown'd, or give him up for ever.
A. Phillips.

4. It is sometimes reduplicated.

For ever and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shakesp.
I know a lord, who values no lease, though for a thousand years, nor any estate that is not for ever and ever. Temple.

The meeting points the fatal lock dis sever
From the fair head for ever and for ever. Pope.

5. At one time, as ever and anon; that is,
at one time and another; now and then.

So long as Guyon with her communed,
Unto the ground she cast her modest eye;
And ever and anon, with rosy red,
The bathful blood her snowy cheeks did dye.
Fairy Queen.

The fat one's would be ever and anon, making sport with the lean, and calling them starvelings.
L'Estrange.

He lay stretch'd along,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryd.

6. In any degree.

Let no man fear that harmful creature ever the less, because he sees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.

For a mine undiscovered, neither the owner of the ground or any body else are ever the richer. Collier.

It suffices to the unity of any idea, that it be considered as one representation or picture, though made up of ever so many particulars. Locke.

There must be somewhere such a rank as man:
And all the question, wrangle e'er so long,
Is only this, If God has plac'd him wrong? Pope.

7. A word of enforcement, or aggravation.

As soon as ever he had done it; that is, immediately after he had done it. In this sense it is scarcely used but in familiar language.

That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman. Shakesp.
They brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den. Dan. iv. 24.

That purse in your hand, has a twin-brother, is as like him as ever he can look. Dryden's Spanish Fry.
As soon as e'er the bird is dead,

Opening again, he lays his claim
To halt the profit half the same. Prior.

The title of duke had been sunk in the family ever, since the attainder of the great Duke of Sul-folk. Addison on Italy.

8. EVER A. Any: [as every, that is, even rich or ever each is each one, all.] This word is still retained in the Scottish dialect.

I am old, I am old.

—I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

9. It is often contracted into e'er.

10. It is much used in composition in the sense of always: as, evergreen, green throughout the year; everduring, enduring without end. It is added almost arbitrarily to neutral participles and adjectives, and will be sufficiently explained by the following instances:

EVERBU'BBLING. adj. [ever and bubbling.]
Boiling up with perpetual murmurs.

Panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That everbubbling spring. Crashaw.

EVERBU'RNING. adj. [ever and burning.]
Unextinguished.

His tail was stretched out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught;
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The everburning lamps from thence it brought.
Spenser.

Torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With everburning sulphur unconsum'd! Milton.

EVERDU'RING. adj. [ever and during.]
Eternal; enduring without end.

Our souls, piercing through the impurity of flesh, behold the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge to contemplate the everduring glory and term-less joy. Raleigh.

Heav'n open'd wide
Her everduring gates, harmonious sound!
On golden hinges moving. Milton's Paradise Lost.

EVERGREEN. adj. [ever and green.] Verdant throughout the year.

There will I build him
A monument, and plant it round with shade
Of laurel, evergreen, and branching palm. Milton.
The juice, when in greater plenty than can be exhaled by the sun, renders the plant evergreen.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

E'VERGREEN. n. s. A plant that retains its verdure through all the seasons.

Some of the hardiest evergreens may be transplanted, especially if the weather be moist and temperate. Evelyn.

I find you are against filling an English garden with evergreens. Addison's Spectator.

EVERHONOURED. adj. [ever and honoured.]
Always held in honour or esteem.

Mentcs an everhonour'd name, of old High in Ulysses' social list enroll'd. Pope's Odyssey.

EVERLASTING. adj. [ever and lasting.]

1. Lasting or enduring without end; perpetual; immortal; eternal.

Whether we shall meet again, I know not;
Therefore our everlasting farewell take:
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius. Shakesp.
The everlasting life, both of body and soul, in that future state, whether in bliss or woe, hath been added. Hammond.

And what a trifle is a moment's breath,
Laid in the scale with everlasting death! Denham.

2. It is used of past as well as future eternity, though not so properly.

EVERLASTING. n. s. Eternity; eternal duration whether past or future.

From everlasting to everlasting thou art God.
Psalms xc. 2.

We are in God through the knowledge which is had of us, and the love which is borne towards us, from everlasting. Hooker.

EVERLASTINGLY. adv. [from everlasting.]
Eternally; without end.

I'll hate him everlastingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more. Shakesp.
Many have made themselves everlastingly ridiculous. Swift.

EVERLASTINGNESS. n. s. [from everlasting.] Eternity; perpetuity; an indefinite duration.

Nothing could make me sooner to confess,
That this world had an everlastingness,
Than to consider that a year is run
Since both this lower world's and the sun's sun.
Did set. Donne.

EVERLIVING. adj. [ever and living.] Living without end; immortal; eternal; incessant.

Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glist'eth bright
With burning stars and everliving fires! Fairy Q.
In that he is man, he received life from the Father, as from the fountain of that everliving Deity.
Hooker.

God's justice in the one, and his goodness in the other, is exerted for evermore, as the everliving subjects of his reward and punishment. Raleigh.

The instinct of brutes and insects can be the effect of nothing else than the wisdom and skill of a powerful everliving agent. Newton.

EVERMORE. adv. [ever and more.] Always;
eternally. More seems an expletive accidentally added, unless it signified originally from this time: as, evermore, always, henceforward; but this sense has not been strictly preserved.

It govern'd was, and guided evermore,
Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoare.
Fairy Queen.

Sparks by nature evermore aspire,
Which makes them now to such a highness flee.
Davies.

Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God for evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson.

EVEROPEN. adj. [ever and open.] Never closed; not at any time shut.

God is the great eye of the world, always watching over our actions, and has an everopen ear to all our words. Taylor.

EVERPLEASING. adj. [ever and pleasing.] Delighting at all times; never ceasing to give pleasure.

The everpleasing Pamela was content to urge a little farther for me. Sidney.

Forlaking Sheria's everpleasing shore,
The winds to Marathon the virgin bore. Pope.

To EVERSE. v. a. [eversus, Latin.] To overthrow; to subvert; to destroy. Not used.

The foundation of this principle is totally everfed by the ingenious commentator upon immaterial beings. Glanville.

To EVERT. v. a. [everto, Latin.] To destroy; to overthrow.

A process is valid, if the jurisdiction of the judge is not yet everfed and overthrown. Ayliffe.

EVERWATCHFUL. adj. [ever and watchful.]
Always vigilant.

Plac'd at the helm he sat, and mark'd the skies,
Nor clos'd in sleep his everwatchful eyes. Pope.

E'VERY. adj. in old language everich, that is ever each; æpen ealc, Saxon.]

1. Each one of all. Every has therefore no plural signification.

He propos'd unto God their necessities, and they their own requests for relief in every of them.

All the congregation are holy, every one of them.
Num. xvi.

The King madethis ordonnance, that every twelve years there should be sent forth two ships. Bacon.
The

The virtue and force of every of these three is shrewdly allayed. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Aristotle has long since observed, how unreasonable it is to expect the same kind of proof for every thing, which we have for some things. Tillotson.

Every one, that has an idea of a foot, finds that he can repeat that idea, and, joining it to the former, make the idea of two feet. Locke.

From pole to pole the thunder roars aloud, And broken lightnings flash from ev'ry cloud. Pope.

2. EVERY-WHERE. In all places; in each place.

The substance of the body of Christ was not everywhere seen, nor did it everywhere suffer death; everywhere it could not be entombed: it is not everywhere now, being exalted into heaven. Hooker.

If I send my son abroad, how is it possible to keep him from vice, which is everywhere so in fashion? Locke.

'Tis no-where to be found, or everywhere. Pope.

E'VERYOUNG. adj. [ever and young.] Not subject to old age, or decaying; undecaying.

Joys everyyoung, unmix'd with pain or fear, Fill the wide circle of th' eternal year. Pope's Odyss.

E'VESDROPPER. n. s. [eves and dropper.] Some mean fellow that skulks about a house in the night to listen.

What makes you listening there? Get farther off; I preach not to thee, thou wicked evesdropper.

Do but think how becoming your function it is to be disguised like a slave, and an evesdropper, under the woman's windows. Dryden's Don. Sebast.

TO E'VESTIGATE. v. a. [evestigo, Lat.] To search out. DiB.

EUGH. n. s. [This word is so written by most writers; but since the original is, Saxon, or Welsh yeww, more favours the easier orthography of yew, I have referred it thither.] A tree.

Age's chief arts, and arms, are to grow wise;
Virtue to know, and, known, to exercise. Denham.

7. To exert; to put in use.

The princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. Matt. xi.

Their consciences oblige them to submit to that dominion which their governors had a right to exercise over them. Locke.

8. To practice or use in order to habitual skill.

To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is given, as raw Young soldiers at their exercising gnaw. Dryden.

Mean while I'll draw up my Numidian troop Within the square, to exercise their arms. Addison.

To E'XERCISE. v. n. To use exercise; to labour for health or for amusement.

The Lacedemonians were remarkable for the sport, and Alexander the Great frequently exercised at it. Brycone.

E'XERCISER. n. f. [from exercise.] He that directs or uses exercise. Diſt.

EXERCITATION. n. f. [exercitatio, Latin.]

1. Exercise.

It were some extenuation of the curse, if in sudore vultus tui were confinable unto corporeal exercitations. Brown.

2. Practice; use.

By frequent exercitations we form them within us. Felton.

To EXERT. v. a. [exero, Latin.]

1. To use with an effort; to use with ardour and vehemence.

When the service of Britain requires your courage and conduct, you may exert them both. Dryden.

Whate'er I am, each faculty
The utmost power of my exerted soul,
Preserves a being only for your service. Rowe.

2. To put forth to perform.

When the will has exerted an act of command upon any faculty of the soul, or member of the body, it has done all that the whole man, as a moral agent, can do for the actual exercise or employment of such a faculty or member. Saath.

3. To enforce; to push to an effort. With the reciprocal pronoun.

Strong virtue, like strong nature; struggles still;
Exerts itself; and then throws off the ill. Dryden.

4. To bring out.

The several parts lay hidden in the piece,
Th' occasion but exerted that or this. Dryden.

5. To emit; to push out; to put forth.

The orchard loves to wave
With winter winds, before the gems exert
Their feeble heads. Philips.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight Exert their heads from underneath the mists,
And upward shoot, and kindle as they pass,
And with diffusive light adorn the heavenly place. Dryden.

EXERTION. n. f. [from exert.] The act of exerting; effort.

EXERTION.

EXH

EXESION. n. f. [exesus, Latin.] The act of eating through.

EXESTUATION. n. f. [exastue, Latin.] The state of boiling; tumultuous heat; effervescence; ebullition.

Saltpetre is in operation a cold body: physicians and chymists give it in fevers, to allay the inward exstitutions of the blood and humours. Boyle.

EXFO'LIATE. v. n. [ex and folium, Latin.] To shell off; separate, as a corrupt bone from the sound part. A term of chirurgery.

Our work went on successfully, the bone exfoliating from the edges. Wifeman's Surgery.

EXFOLIATION. n. f. [from exfoliate.] The process by which the corrupted part of the bone separates from the sound.

If the bone be dressed, the flesh will soon arise in that cut of the bone, and make exfoliation of what is necessary, and incarn it. Wifeman's Surgery.

EXFOLIATIVE. adj. [from exfoliate.] That which has the power of procuring exfoliation.

Dress the bone with the milder exfoliatives, 'till the burnt bone is cast off. Wifeman's Surgery.

EXHA'LE. adj. [from exhale.] That which may be evaporated or exhaled.

The fire may resolve some of the more spirituous and exhalable parts, whereas distillation has shewn me that alabaster is not destitute, into vapours. Boyle.

EXHALATION. n. f. [exhalatio, Latin.]

1. The act of exhaling or sending out in vapours; emission.

2. The state of evaporating or flying out in vapours; evaporation.

3. That which rises in vapours, and sometimes takes the form of meteors.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,
No 'scape of nature, no distemper'd day,
But they would pluck away its nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs. Shakespeare.

Moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; which, condensed by a popular odium, are capable to cast a cloud upon the brightest merit and integrity. King Charles.

A fabrick huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet. Milton.

It is no wonder if the earth be often shaken, there being quantities of exhalations within those mines, or cavernous passages, that are capable of rarefaction and inflammation. Burn.

The growing tow'rs like exhalations rise,
And the huge columns heave into the skies. Pope.

EXHA'LE. v. a. [exhalo, Latin.]

1. To send or draw out in vapours or fumes.

You light is not daylight, I know it well:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer. Shakespeare.
I flattered myself with the hopes that the vapour had been exhaled. Temple.

Fear freezes minds; but love, like heat,
Exhales the soul sublime to seek her native seat. Dryden.

2. To draw out.

See, dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh!
Blush, bluish, thou lump of foul deformity;
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells!
Shakespeare.

EXHA'LEMENT. n. f. [from exhale.] Matter exhaled; vapour.

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross and corporal exhalement, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales. Brown.

EXHAUST. v. n.

1. To drain; to diminish; to deprive by draining.

Single men be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhausted. Bacon.

Spermatick matter of a vitious sort abounds in the blood, exhausts it of its best spirits, and drives the flower of it to the seminal vessels. Wifeman.

2. To draw out totally; to draw 'till nothing is left.

Though the knowledge they have left us be worth our study, yet they exhausted not all its treasures: they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages. Locke.

The nursing grove
Seems fair awhile, shelter'd with foster earth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails. Philips.

EXHAUSTION. n. f. [from exhaust.] The act of drawing or draining.

EXHAUSTLESS. adj. [from exhaust.] Not to be emptied; not to be all drawn off; inexhaustible.

Of heat and light, what everdure stores
Brought from the sun's exhaustless golden shores,
Through gulphs immense of intervening air,
Enrich the earth, and every loss repair. Blackmore.

EXHIBIT. v. a. [exhibeo, Latin.]

1. To offer to view or use; to offer or propose in a formal or publick manner.

If any claim redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street. Shakespeare.

He suffered his attorney-general to exhibit a charge of high treason against the earl. Clarendon.

2. To show; to display.

One of an unfortunate constitution is perpetually exhibiting a miserable example of the weakness of mind and body. Pope.

EXHIBITER. n. f. [from exhibit.] He that offers any thing, as a petition or charge, in a publick manner.

He seems indifferent,
Or rather swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing th' exhibitors against us. Shak.

EXHIBITION. n. f. [from exhibit.]

1. The act of exhibiting; display; setting forth.

What are all mechanick works, but the sensible exhibition of mathemauck demonstrations? Grew.

2. Allowance; salary; pension: it is much used for pensions allowed to scholars at the university.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due preference of place and exhibition,
As levels with her breeding. Shakespeare.

What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me. Shakespeare.

All was assigned to the army and garrisons there, and she received only a pension or exhibition out of his coffers. Bacon.

He is now neglected, and driven to live in exile upon a small exhibition. Swift.

3. Payment; recompence.

I would not do such a thing for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition. Shakespeare.

EXHIBITIVE. adj. [from exhibit.] Representative; displaying.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather, they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously exhibitive or representative, according to various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

EXHILARATE. v. a. [exhilaro, Latin.]

To make cheerful; to cheer; to fill with mirth; to enliven; to glad; to gladden.

The coming into a fair garden, the coming into a fair room richly furnished, a beautiful person, and the like, do delight, and exhilarate the spirits much. Bacon's Natural History.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapours bland

EXI

About their spirits had play'd, and inmost powers
Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton.

Let them thank
Boon nature, that thus annually supplies
Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts Exhilarates their languid minds, within The golden mean confin'd. Philips.

EXHILARATION. n. f. [from exhilarate.]

1. The act of giving gaiety.

2. The state of being enlivened.

Exhilaration hath some affinity with joy, though it be a much lighter motion. Bacon.

EXHO'RT. v. a. [exhortor, Latin.] To incite by words to any good action.

We beseech you, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us, how you ought to walk, so ye would abound. Theff.

My duty is to exhort you to consider the dignity of that holy mystery. Common Prayer.

Designing or exhorting glorious war. Milton.

EXHORTATION. n. f. [from exhort.]

1. The act of exhorting; incitement to good.

If we will not encourage publick beneficence,
'till we are secure that no storm shall overturn what we help to build, there is no room for exhortations to charity. Atterbury.

2. The form of words by which one is exhortated.

I'll end my exhortation after dinner. Shakespeare.

EXHORTATORY. adj. [from exhort.] Tending to exhort.

EXHO'RTER. n. f. [from exhort.] One who exhorts or encourages by words.

EXI'CCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Latin.] To dry; to dry up. Diak.

EXICCATION. n. f. [from exiccate.] A refaction; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and exiccation of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere. Bentley.

EXICCATIVE. adj. [from exiccate.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

EXIGENCE. } n. f. [This word is proba-EXIGENCY. } bly only a corruption of exigents, vitiated by an unskilful pronunciation.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men, we are at our own choice, both for time and place and form, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private. Hooker.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are. Atterbury.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real convenience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of Providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers.

2. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.

This dissimulation in war may be called stratagem and conduct; in other exigencies address and dexterity. Broome.

Now in such exigencies not to need;
Upon my word you must be rich indeed!
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves. Pope.

EXIGENT. n. f. [exigens, Latin.]

1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.

In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devised to their hands. Hooker, Preface.

The council met, your guards to find you tents,
And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.

2. [A law term.] A writ sued when the defendant

defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry. Shakespeare uses it for any extremity.

Hammer.

3. End.

These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent, Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent. Shakespeare.

EXIGUITY. n. f. [exiguitas, Latin.] Smallness; diminutiveness; slenderness.

The exiguity and shape of the extant particles is now supposed. Boyle on Colours.

EXIGUOUS. adj. [exiguus, Latin.] Small; diminutive; little. Not used.

Their subtle parts and exiguous dose are consumed and evaporated in less than two hours time. Harvey.

EXILE. n. f. [exilium, Latin.] It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable: now it is uniformly on the first.]

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.

Our state of bodies would bewray what life We've led since thy exile. Shakespeare.

Welcome is exile, welcome were my death. Shakespeare.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death, Vagabond exile, slaying, pent to linger, But with a grain of day, I would not buy Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakespeare.

2. The person banished.

O must the wretched exiles ever mourn, Nor after length of rowling years return? Dryden.

Ulysses, sole of all the victor train, An exile from his dear paternal coast, Deplor'd his absent queen, and empire lost. Pope.

EXILE. adj. [exilis, Latin.] Small; slender; not full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.

It were good to enquire what means may be to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather. Bacon.

In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more exile sound than when the lid is open. Bacon.

TO EXILE. v. a. [from the noun. This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.

Call home our exil'd friends abroad, That fled the snares of watchful tyranny. Shakespeare.

Foul subordination is predominant, And equity exil'd your highness' land. Shakespeare.

For that offence, Immediately we do exile him hence. Shakespeare.

They, fettered with the bonds of a long night, Lay there exiled from the eternal Providence. Wisd. xvii. 2.

His brutal manners from his breast exil'd, His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he hid. Dryden.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate, And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate, Expel'd and exil'd. Dryden.

EXILEMENT. n. f. [from exile.] Banishment.

Fitzosborn was discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Wotton.

EXILIATION. n. f. [exiliatio, Latin.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From saltpetre proceedeth the force and report of gunpowder: for sulphur and small-coal mixt, will not take fire with noise or exhibition; and powder, which is made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.

EXILITY. n. f. [exilis, Latin.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.

Certain flies, called ephemeræ, live but a day: the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the sun. Bacon.

For exility of the voice, or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick; and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one letteth not in air. Bacon.

A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its corporeity; neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtility are essentially the same thing. Grew.

EXIMIOUS. adj. [eximius, Latin.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent. Diſt.

EXINANITION. n. f. [exinanitio, Latin.] Privation; loss.

He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his exinanition. Decay of Piety.

TO EXIST. v. n. [existere, Latin.] To be; to have a being.

It is easy to conceive that an Almighty Power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginning, but to have existed from eternity. South.

It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature. Locke.

One year is past, a different scene! No farther mention of the dean: Who now, alas, no more is mist Than if he never did exist. Swift.

EXISTENCE. n. f. [existentia, low Latin.]

EXISTENCY. n. f. State of being; actual possession of being.

Nor is only the existency of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof. Brown.

It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive eternal physical changes, or variety of states or manner of existency naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it. Hale.

The soul, secur'd in her existence, smiles At the drawn dagger, and defies its point. Addison.

When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation. When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have existence also. Watts.

EXISTENT. adj. [from existere.] Having being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatever sign the sun possessed, whose recess or vicinity defineth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent. Brown.

The eyes and minds are fastened on objects which have no real being, as if they were truly existent. Dryden.

EXISTIMATION. n. f. [existimatio, Latin.]

1. Opinion.

2. Esteem.

EXIT. n. f. [exit, Latin.]

1. The term set in the margin of plays to mark the time at which the player goes off the stage.

2. Recess; departure; act of quitting the stage; act of quitting the theatre of life.

All the world's a stage, And all the men and women merely players: They have their exits and their entrances, And one man in his time plays many parts. Shak.

A regard for fame becomes a man more towards the exit than at his entrance into life. Swift.

Many of your old comrades live a short life, and make a figure at their exit. Swift.

3. Passage out of any place.

In such a pervious substance as the brain, they might find an easy either entrance or exit, almost every where. Glanville.

4. Way by which there is a passage out.

The fire makes its way, forcing the water forth through its ordinary exits, wells, and the outlets of rivers. Woodward.

EXITIAL. adj. [exitialis, Lat.] Destructive.

EXITIOUS. adj. [exitiosus, Lat.] Destructive; fatal; mortal; deleterious. Not in use.

Most exitial fever, although not concomitant

EXOSTO'SIS. n. s. [ἐξ and ὄστος.] Any protuberance of a bone that is not natural, as often happens in venereal cases. Quincy.

EXO'SSEOUS. adj. [ex and ossa, Latin.] Wanting bones; boneless; formed without bones.

Thus we daily observe in the heads of fishes, as also in snails and soft exosseous animals, nature near the head hath placed a flat white stone, or testaceous concretion. Brown.

EXOTICK. adj. [ἐξωτικός.] Foreign; not produced in our own country; not domestic.

Some learned men treat of the nature of letters as of some remote exotick thing, whereof we had no knowledge but by fabulous relations. Holder.

Continue fresh hot-beds to entertain such exotick plants as arrive not to their perfection without them. Evelyn's Kalends.

EXOTICK. n. s. A foreign plant.

EXP

Claudian was seated on the other summit, which was barren, and produced, on some spots, plants that are unknown to Italy, and such as the gardeners call exoticks. Addison's Guard.

TO EXPAND. v. a. [expando, Latin.]

1. To spread; to lay open as a net or sheet.
2. To dilate; to spread out every way; to diffuse.

She useth most the target to fence away the blow, and leaves all other weapons to the Alchoran to propagate and expand itself. Herivel.

Bellerophon's horse, framed of iron, and placed between two loadstones, with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown.

An animal growing, expands its fibres in the air as a fluid. Arbutnot on Air.

Along the stream of time thy name
Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame. Pope.

EXPANSE. n. s. [expansum, Latin.] A body widely extended without inequalities.

A murmuring sound
Of waters issue from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain; then stood unmov'd,
Pure as th' expanse of heav'n. Milton.

Bright as th' ethereal glows the green expanse. Savage.

On the smooth expanse of crystal lakes,
The sinking stone at first a circle makes;
The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,
Spreads in a second circle, then a third;
Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,
Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSABILITY. n. s. [from expansible.]

Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be alike in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities. Grew.

EXPANSIBLE. adj. [from expansus, Latin.] Capable to be extended; capable to spread into a wider surface.

Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Grew.

EXPANSION. n. s. [from expand.]

1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it. Bentley.

2. The act of spreading out.

The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight. Grew.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

The capacious mind of man cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and make incursions into that incomprehensible inane. Locke.

4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter. Locke.

It would for ever take an useless flight,
Lost in expansion, void and infinite. Blackmore.

EXPANSIVE. adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.

The elastic or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather glasses. Ray.

Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold. Thompson.

TO EXPATiate. v. n. [expatior, Latin.]

1. To range at large; to rove without any prescribed limits.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatiate in. Addison's Spectator.

He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes,
Bids his free soul expatiate in the skies;
Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam,
Survey the region, and confess her home. Pope.

Expatiate free o'er all this scene of man;
A mighty maze! but not without a plan. Pope.

With wonder seiz'd, we view the pleasing ground,
And walk delighted, and expatiate round. Pope.

2. To enlarge upon language.

They had a custom of offering the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence: Dacier expatiates upon this custom. Broome.

3. To let loose; to allow to range. This sense, which is active, is very improper.

Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can possibly give, shall afterwards afford an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate itself. Dryd.

Hereof experience hath informed reason, and time hath made those things apparent which were hidden. Raleigh.

But apt the mind or fancy is to rove,
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end,
'Till warn'd, or by experience taught, she learn,
That not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle, but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom; what is more, is fume
Or emptiness, or fond impertinence,
And renders us in things that most concern
Unpractic'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.

2. Knowledge gained by trial and practice.

Boys immature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasures. Shakespeare.

But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
Whom age and long experience render wise. Pope.

EXPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicate.]

Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or any way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject; as every mortal man is a son of Adam. Watts's Logick.

EXPLICA'TOR. n. s. [from explicate.] Expounder; interpreter; explainer.

EXPLICIT. adj. [explicitus, Latin.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of censuring by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence. Burnet.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to show how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite. South's Sermons.

EXPLI'CITLY. adv. [from explicit.] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposals; but where it is indulged, it usually is its own expounder; and explicitly avows it. Government of the Tongue.

To EXPLO'DE. v. a. [explodo, Latin.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with some noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands, Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence Unseen amid' the throng. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Thus was th' applause they meant, Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame, Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milt.

Old age explodes all but morality. Roscommon.

There is pretended that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno? South.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled power did explode The massy ball, and the brass tube unload. Blackmore.

EXPLO'DER. n. s. [from explode.] An hisser; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

EXPLOIT. n. s. [expletum, Latin, res expleta.] A design accomplished; an achievement; a successful attempt.

Know'st thou not any whom corrupting gold Would tempt into a close exploit of death? Shak.

Flight cannot stain the honour you have won; But mine it will that no exploit have done. Shak.

How shall I relate To human sense th' invisible exploits Of warring spirits? Milton's Paradise Lost.

He breaks fierce Hannibal's insulting heats; Of which exploit thus our friend Ennius treats. Denham.

Will you thus dishonour Your past exploits, and sully all your wars? Addis.

To EXPLOIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to achieve. Not used.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden.

To EXPLO'RATE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.]

To search out; to try by searching; to explore.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explore their way. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXPLORA'TION. n. s. [from explore.]

Search; examination.

For exact exploration scales should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural veracity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORA'TOR. n. s. [from explore.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

EXPLO'RATORY. adj. [from explore.] Searching; examining.

To EXPLORE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.]

To try; to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that fight endur'd not, where he stood Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds, And thus his own undaunted heart explores. Milt.

Divers opinions I have been inclined to question not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire. Boyle.

But Cypri, and the rest of sounder mind, The fatal present to the flames design'd, Or to the wat'ry deep; at least to bore The hollow sides, and hidden frauds explore. Dryden's Aen.

The mighty Stagyrite first left the shore, Spread all his sails and durst the deeps explore; He steer'd securely, and discover'd far, Led by the light of the Mexican star. Pope.

EXPLO'REMENT.

EXPLOREMENT. n. s. [from explore.] Search; trial.

The frustrated search of Porta, upon the explorement of many, could scarce find one. Brown.

EXPLOSION. n. s. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

Those parts which abound with strata of stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered, an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever. Woodward.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes of an æolipile: the sulphur also, being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion. Newton's Opt.

With explosion vast,

The thunder raises his tremendous voice. Thomson.

EXPLOSIVE. adj. [from explode.] Driving out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power renders the shock greater. Woodward.

EXPONENT. n. s. [from expono, Latin.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents: and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONENTIAL. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

TO EXPORT. v. a. [from exporto, Latin.] To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

Edward III by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandise, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand. Addis. Freeb.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes. Arbutnot.

EXPORT. n. s. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPORTATION. n. s. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessities, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

EXPORTER. n. s. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Locke.

TO EXPOSE. v. a. [from expono, expositum, Lat. exposere, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.

Take Phisic Pomp;

Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,

That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,

And shew Heaven just. Shakespeare's King Lear.

VOL. I.

Who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim? Milton.

To pass the ripper period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded stage,
To lasting toils expos'd, and endless cares,
To open dangers, and to secret snares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,

He would not to the seas expose his wife, Dryden.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;

Then fields the blades of buried corn disclose,
And while the balmy western spirit blows,
Earth to the breath her bosom dares expose. Dryden.

4. To lay open, to censure or ridicule; to shew in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryd. Juv. Dedic.

Tully has just exposed a precept, that a man should live with his friend in such a manner that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison's Spectator.

A fool might once himself alone expose,

Now one in verse makes many more in prose. Pope.

Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once exposed and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleased to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

The exposing himself notoriously did change the fortune of the day, when his troops begun to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again exposes him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,

To be expos'd or rear'd as she may please,

Feel her neglect, and pine for her disease. Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison's Spect.

EXPOSITION. n. s. [from expose.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbutnot.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining. Arbutnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation: [from expono, expono, Latin.]

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,

When that your flock, assembled by the bell,

Encircled you, to hear with reverence

Your exposition on the holy text. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

You are a worthy judge;

You know the law: your exposition

Hath been most sound, Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

EXPOSITOR. n. s. [from expositor, Latin.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mirth-moving jest,

Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,

Delivers in such apt and gracious words,

That aged ears play truant at his tales. Shakespeare.

In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son,

Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not con-sentaneous unto the authority of expositors. Brown.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgement or affliction. South's Sermons.

Scholastic, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

TO EXPOSTULATE. v. n. [from expostulo, Latin.] To canvass with another: to altercation; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate,

Save that for reverence of some alive

I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Shakespeare.

The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperor. Hayward.

It is madness for friendless and unarmed innocence to expostulate with invincible power. L'Estr.

Durst I expostulate with Providence, I then might ask. Cotton.

The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will have regard to the reasonableness of the demand. Swift.

EXPOSTULATION. n. s. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.

Expostulations end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spectator.

2. Charge; accusation.

This makes her bleeding patients to accuse

High Heav'n, and these expostulations use;

Could Nature then no private woman grace,

Whom we may dare to love with such a face? Waller.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or considerately in the course of good friendship. Ayliffe.

EXPOSTULATOR. n. s. [from expostulate.]

One that debates with another without open rupture.

EXPOSTULATORY. adj. [from expostulate.]

Containing expostulation.

This fable is a kind of an expostulatory debate between Bounty and Ingratitude. L'Estrange.

EXPOSURE. n. s. [from expose.]

1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.

2. The state of being open to observation.

When we have our naked frailties hid,

That suffer in exposure, let us meet. Shakesp. Macb.

3. The state of being expos'd, or being liable to any thing.

Determine on some course,

More than a wild exposure to each chance

That starts i' th' way before thee. Shak. Coriolanus.

4. The state of being in danger.

Ajax sets Thersites

To match us in comparisons with dirt;

To weaken and discredit our exposure,

How hard soever rounded in with danger. Shakesp.

5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.

The cold now advancing set such plants as will not endure the house, in pots, two or three inches, lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Evelyn.

TO EXPOUND. v. a. [from expono, Latin.]

1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to shew the meaning of.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of those words than pope Leo himself expounded them whose speech concerning our Lord's ascension, may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.

—And this way you have well expounded it. Shakesp.

He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself. Luke, xxiv. 27.

Those right holy fathers, as in matters of faith

they did not make truth, but religiously expounded

it; so in matters of ecclesiastical government, they did not create provinces, but ordered the countries which they then had. Raleigh.

2. To examine; to lay open: a Latinism.

He expounded both his pockets.

And found a watch with rings and lockets. Hudibras.

EXPOUNDER. n. s. [from expono.] Explainer; interpreter.

This they did partly as faithful witnesses; making a mere relation of what God himself revealed unto them; and partly as careful expounders, teachers, and persuaders thereof. Hooker.

The best he was,
And faithfullest expounder of the laws. Dryd. Juv.
To EXPRE'SS, v. a. [exprimo, exprissus, Latin].

1. To copy; to resemble; to represent.

So kids and whelps their fires and dams express.
And to the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden.

Adorn a dream, expressing human form,
The shape of him who suffered in the storm. Dryden.

2. To represent by any of the imitative arts; as poetry, sculpture, painting.

Each skilful artist shall express thy form
In animated gold. Smith's Phædra and Hippolytus.

3. To represent in words; to exhibit by language; to utter; to declare.

Less than half we find express,
Envy bid conceal the rest. Milton.

Though they have learned those sounds, yet there are no determined ideas laid up in their minds, which are to be expressed to others by them. Locke.

In moral ideas we have no sensible marks that resemble them, whereby we can set them down: we have nothing but words to express them by. Locke.

True-wit is nature to advantage dress,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express. Pope.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for dress. Pope.

To shed tears, among the ancients, when they should express their gratitude to the gods with joy, was esteemed a prophanation. Boome.

4. To shew or make known in any manner.

No longer shall thy bodice aptly lace,
That air and shape of harmony express,
Fine by degrees, and delicately less. Prior.

5. To utter; to declare; with the reciprocal pronoun.

Mr. Philips did express himself with much indignation against me one evening. Pope.

6. To denote; to designate.

Moses and Aaron took these men expressed by their names. Numb. i. 17.

7. To squeeze out; to force out by compression.

Among the watry juices of fruit are all the fruits out of which drink is expressed; as the grape and the apple. Bacon.

8. To extort by violence, or elicit by art: a Latinism.

Halters and racks cannot express from thee,
More than thy deeds: 'tis only judgement waits thee. Ben Jonson.

Art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness
From dull privatives and lean emptiness. Donne.

EXPRESSES, adj. [from the verb.]

1. Copied; resembling; exactly like.

Of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love; his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.

2. Plain; apparent; declared in direct terms.

There hath been some doubt whether containing in Scripture do import express setting down in plain terms; or the comprehending in such sort, that by reason we may from thence conclude all things which are necessary. Hooker.

There is not any positive law of men, whether general or particular, received by formal express consent as in councils; or by secret approbation; but the same may be taken away, if occasion serves. Hooker.

All the gazers on the skies
Read not in fair heav'n's story
Expresser truth, or truer glory,
Than they might in her bright eyes. Ben Jonson.

3. Clear; not dubious. This seems to be no proper use.

I love to feel myself of an express and settled judgement and affection in things of the greatest moment. More's Div. Dial.

As to the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations; they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stillingfleet.

Where reason or scripture is express for any opinion, or action, we may receive it as of divine authority. Locke.

4. On purpose; for a particular end.

They who are not induced to believe and live as they ought, by those discoveries which God hath made in Scripture, would stand out against any evidence whatsoever; even that of a messenger sent express from the other world. Atterbury.

EXPRESSES, n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A messenger sent on purpose.

The king sent an express immediately to the marquis, with all the particular informations. Clarendon.

As if expressers from all parts had come,
With such alarms threat'ning the state of Rome. Dryd. Juv.

Upon the first moment I was discovered, the emperor had early notice of it by an express. Gulliver's Travels.

2. A message sent.

I am content my heart should be discovered to the world, without any of those popular captations which some men use in their speeches and expresses. King Charles.

3. A declaration in plain terms. Not usual.

They do not only contradict the general design and particular expresses of the gospel, but trespass against all logic and common sense. Norris.

EXPRESSIVE, adj. [from express.]

1. That may be uttered or declared.

They had not only a memory and tradition of it in general, but even of several particular accidents of it likewise, which they handed downwards to the succeeding ages, with notes of the greatest terror expressible. Woodward's Natural History.

2. That may be drawn by squeezing or expression.

EXPRESSION, n. s. [from express.]

1. The act or power of representing any thing.

There is nothing comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith a man alone is endowed, as with an instrument suitable to the excellency of his soul, for the communication of his thoughts. Hilder on Speech.

2. The form or mode of language in which any thoughts are uttered.

But ill expression sometimes give allay
To noble thoughts, whose flame shall ne'er decay. Buckingham.

The poet, to reconcile Helen to his reader, brings her in as a penitent, condemning her own infidelity in very strong expressions. Boome.

3. A phrase; a mode of speech.

4. The act of squeezing or forcing out any thing by a press.

Those juices that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink by mixture of water. Bacon.

The juices of the leaves are obtained by expression: from this juice proceeds the taste. Arbutnot.

EXPRESSIVE, adj. [from express.] Having the power of utterance or representation.

With of before the thing expressed.

Each verse so swells expressive of her woes
And ev'ry tear in lines to mournful flows,
We, spite of fame, her fate reverse & believe,
O'erlook her crimes, and think she ought to live! Tickell.

And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a flow'r,
Th' expressive emblem of their softer pow'r. Pope.

A visible and exemplary obedience to God's laws is the most expressive acknowledgement of the majesty and sovereignty of God, and disposes others to glorify him by the same observances. Rogers.

EXPRESSIVELY, adv. [from expressive.] In a clear and representative way.

EXPRESSIVENESS, n. s. [from expressive.]

The power of expression, or representation by words.

The murrain has all the expressiveness that words can give: it was here that Virgil strained hard to outdo Lucretius. Addison.

EXPRESSLY, adj. [from express.] In direct terms; plainly; not by implication; not generally.

It doth not follow, that of necessity we shall sin, unless we expressly extend this in every particular. Hooker.

Articles of belief, and things which all men must do, to the end they may be saved, are either expressly set down in Scripture, or else plainly thereby to be gathered. Hooker.

Who dare cross'em,
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly? Shakespeare.

The beginning of the worship of images in these western parts, was by the folly and superstition of the people expressly against the will of their own bishop. Stillingfleet.

This account I expressly give of them, when I enter on the argument. Atterbury.

All the duties that the best political laws enjoin, as conducive to the quiet and order of social life, are expressly commanded by our religion. Rogers.

EXPRESSURE, n. s. [from express.] Now disused.

1. Expression; utterance. Not used.

There is a mystery in the soul of state,
Which hath an operation more divine,
Than breath or pen can give expression to. Shakespeare.

2. The form; the likeness represented. Not used.

I will drop some obscure epistles of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the manner of his gait, the expression of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself personated. Shakespeare.

3. The mark; the impression. Not used.

And nightly, meadow fairies, look you sing,
Like to the garter-compass in a ring:
Th' expression that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile fresh than all the field to see. Shakespeare.

To EXPROBRATE, v. a. [exprobro, Latin.] To charge upon with reproach; to impute only with blame; to upbraid.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of forks: now if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

EXPROBRATION, n. s. [from exprobrate.] Scornful charge; reproachful accusation; act of upbraiding.

The goodness we glory in, is to find out some what whereby we may judge others to be ungodly: each other's fault we observe as matter of exprobration, not of grief. Hooker.

The Parthians, with exprobration of Crassus's thirst after money, poured gold into his mouth after he was dead. Abbot.

It will be a denial with scorn, with a taunting exprobration; and to be miserable without commiseration, is the height of misery. Saunders's Sermon.

No need such boasts, or exprobrations false
Of cowardice: the military mound
The British files transcend in evil hour
For their proud songs. Philips.

To EXPROPRIATE, v. a. [ex and proprius, Latin.] To make no longer our own; to hold no longer as a property. Not in use.

When you have resigned, or rather consigned your expropriated will to God, and thereby entrusted him to will for you, all his dispensations towards you are, in effect, the acts of your own will. Boyle's Seraphick Love.

To EXPUGN, v. a. [expugno, Latin.] To conquer; to take by assault.

EXPUGNATION, n. s. [from expugn.] Conquest; the act of taking by assault.

EXPUNGE. v. a. [expango, Latin.]

1. To blot out; to rub out.

The difference of the denarius and drachm having been done in the manuscript, it was needless to expunge it. Arbutnot.

Neither do they remember the many alterations, additions, and expungings made by great authors in those treatises which they prepare for the publick. Swift.

2. To efface; to annihilate.

Wilt thou not to a broken heart dispense
The balm of mercy, and expunge th' offence? Sand.

Deduct what is but vanity, or dress,
Or learning's luxury, or idleness,
Or tricks to shew the stretch of human brain
More curious pleasure, or ingenious pain;
Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrescent parts
Of all, our vices have created arts:
Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serve the past, and must the time to come!

Pope.

EXPURGATION. n. f. [expurgatio, Latin.]

1. The act of purging or cleansing.

All the intestines, but especially the great ones, kidneys, and ureters, serve for expurgation. Wifeman.

2. Purification from bad mixture, as of error or falsehood.

Wise men know, that arts and learning want expurgation; and if the course of truth be permitted to itself, it cannot escape many errors. Brown.

EXPURGATOR. n. f. One who corrects by expunging.

They may well be allowed an expurgator.

Lord Digby.

EXPURGATORY. adj. [expurgatorius, Latin.]

Employed in purging away what is noxious: as, the expurgatory index of the Romanists directs the abolition or expunction of passages admitted by any authors contrary to popery.

There wants expurgatory animadversions, whereby we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasons. Brown.

EXQUISITE. adj. [exquisitus, Latin.]

1. Farfought; excellent; consummate; complete.

His absolute exactness they imitate by tending unto that which is most exquisite in every particular. Hooker.

Why should the state be troubled with this needless charge of keeping and maintaining so great a navy in such exquisite perfection and readiness. Raleigh.

Adam and Eve, before the fall, were a different species; and none but a poet of the most unbounded invention, and the most exquisite judgment, could have fitted their conversation and behaviour to their state of innocence. Addison.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beasts in a more exquisite degree than they are by men; for they taste them sincere and pure, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Atterbury's Sermons.

2. Consummately bad.

With exquisite malice they have mixed the gall and vinegar of falsity and contempt. King Charles.

3. Very sensibly felt.

shoods. Swift.

EXTRACT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The substance extracted; the chief parts drawn from any thing.

In tinctures, if the superfluous spirit of wine be distilled off, it leaves at the bottom that thicker substance, which chemists call the extract of the vegetables. Boyle.

To dip our tongues in gall, to have nothing in our mouth but the extract and exhalation of our inward bitterness, is no great sensuality. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. The chief heads drawn from a book; an abstract; an epitome.

I will present a few extracts out of authors. Camd.
Some books may be read by extracts made of them by others, but only in the less important arguments, and the meaner books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters, stinky things. Bacon's Essays.

Spend some hours every day in reading, and making extracts, if your memory be weak. Swift.

3. Extraction; descent. Not used.

The apostle gives it a value suitable to its extract, branding it with the most ignominious imputation of foolishness. South.

EXTRACTION. n. s. [extractio, Latin.]

1. The act of drawing one part out of a compound; the act of drawing out the principal substance by chemical operation.

Although the charge of extraction should exceed the worth, at least it will discover nature and possibility. Bacon.

The distillations of waters, extractions of oils, and such like experiments are unknown to the ancients.
Hakerwill.

It would not defray the charge and labour of the extractions, and must needs be all irretrievably lost.
Woodward's Natural History.

2. Derivation from an original; lineage; descend.

One whose extraction is from an ancient line,
Gives hope again that well-born men may shine;
The meanest in your nature mild and good,
The noble rest secured in your blood. Waller.

A family of an ancient extraction, transported with the Conqueror out of Normandy. Clarendon.

EXTRACTOR. n. s. [Latin.] The person whereby the a is liquified into the o.]

1. Different from common order and method; not ordinary.

Evils must be judged inevitable, if there be no apparent ordinary way to avoid them; because where council and advice bear rule of God's extraordinary power, without extraordinary warrant, we cannot presume. Hooker.

Spain had no wars save those which were grown into an ordinary; now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Volantine and the Palatinate. Bacon.

See what extraordinary armies have been transmitted thither, and what ordinary forces maintained there. Davies.

2. Different from the common course of law.

If they proceeded in a martial or any other extraordinary way, without any form of law, his majesty should declare his justice and affection to an old faithful servant. Clarendon.

3. Eminent; remarkable; more than common.

The house was built of fair and strong stone, not affecting so much any extraordinary kind of fineness, as an honourable representing of a firm

Twenty constitutions of pope John XXII. are called the extravagants; for that they being written in no order or method, vagant extra corpus sollicitudinis canonum.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

4. Irregular; wild.

For a dance they seem'd

Somewhat extravagant, and wild. Milton's Par. Lost
There appears something nobly wild and extravagant in great natural geniuses, infinitely more beautiful than turn and polishing.

Addison.

New ideas employed my fancy all night, and composed a wild extravagant dream.

Addison.

5. Wasteful; prodigal; vainly expensive.

An extravagant man, who has nothing else to recommend him but a false generosity, is often more beloved than a person of a much more finished character, who is defective in this particular.

Addison.

EXTRA'VAGANT. n. f. One who is confined in no general rule or definition.

We pay or laugh at those famous extravagants.

1

Glansville.

There are certain extravagants among people of all sizes and professions.

L'Estrange.

Some are found to praise our author, and others as rashly and extravagantly contradict his admirers.

Pope.

3. Expensively; luxuriously; wastefully; profusely.

EXTRA'VAGANTNESS. n. f. [from extravagant.] Excess; excursion beyond limits.

EXTRA'VAGATE. n. a. [extra and vagor, Latin.] To wander out of limits. Dict.

EXTRA'VASED. adj. [extra and vasa, Latin.] Forced out of the properly containing vessels.

The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravased blood of pleuretick people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat, Arbutnot on Ali.

EXTRA'VASATION. n. f. [from extravased.] The act of forcing, or state of being forced out of the proper containing vessels.

Aliment, too viscous, obstructing the glands, and by its acrimony corroding the small vessels of the lungs, after a rupture and extravasion of blood, easily produces an ulcer.

Arbutnot.

EXTRA'VASE. adj. [extra and vena, Latin.] Let out of the veins.

That there is a magnetick way of curing wounds, by anointing the weapon; and that the wound is effected in like manner as is the extravase blood by the sympathetick medicine, as to matter of fact, is with circumstances of good evidence asserted.

Glansville's Sceptis.

EXTRA'VERSION. n. f. [extra and versio, Latin.] The act of throwing out; the state of being thrown out.

Nor does there intervene heat to afford them any colour to pretend that there is made an extraversion of the sulphur, or of any of the two other supposed principles.

Boyle.

EXTRA'UGHT. part. [This is an obsolete participle from extrahere; as disfrangit from disfrangere.] Extracted.

Sham'tt thou not, knowing whence thou art extrah't,

To let thy tongue detect thy baseborn heart? Shakef.

EXTRE'ME. adj. [extremus, Latin.] This word is sometimes corrupted by the superlative termination, of which it is by no means capable, as it has in itself the superlative signification.]

1. Greatest; of the highest degree.

The Lord shall smite thee with a fever, an inflammation, and an extreme burning. Deut. xxviii. 22.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and disorderly people.

Bacon.

2. Utmost.

The hairy fool

Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift brook, Augmenting it with tears. Shakef. As you like it.

Milone's cape and Bouli last he view'd,

That on the sea's extremest borders stood. Addison.

3. Last; that beyond which there is nothing.

Farewel, ungrateful and unkind! I go,

Condemn'd by thee, to those sad shades below:

I go th' extremest remedy to prove,

To drink oblivion, and to drench my love. Dryden.

4. Pressing in the utmost degree.

Cases of necessity being sometime but urgent, sometime extreme, the consideration of publick utility is urged equivalent to the earlier kind of necessity.

Hooker.

5. Rigorous; strict.

If thou be extreme to mark what is amiss, O Lord, who shall abide it? Psalms.

EXTRE'ME. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.

Thither by happy footed furies hal'd,

At certain revolutions, all the damn'd

Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change

Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce;

From beds of raging fire to starve in ice

Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine

Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round

Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire. Milton.

Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such

Who still are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.

They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be raised in an extreme, without opposition. Pope's Essay on Homer.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other; extremity.

The true Protestant religion is situated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the extremes on either hand.

Bacon.

The syllogistical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agrees with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extremes, do certainly agree.

Locke.

EXTRE'MELY. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.

She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppressed with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly.

Sidney.

2. Very much; great; in familiar language.

Whoever sees a scoundrel in a gown reeling home at midnight, is apt to be extremely comforted in his own vices.

Swift.

EXTRE'MITY. n. f. [extremitas, Latin.]

1. The utmost point; the highest degree.

He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseased too.

Hooker.

Should any one be cruel and uncharitable to that extremity, yet this would not prove that propriety gave any authority.

Locke.

2. The utmost parts; the parts most remote from the middle.

In its proper colour it is inclining to white, excepting the extremities or tops of the wing feathers, which are black.

Brown.

The extremities of the joints must be seldom hidden, and the extremities or end of the feet never.

Dryden's Disfranch.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities; but such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper. Arbutnot on Diet.

3. The points in the utmost degree of opposition, or at the utmost distance from each other.

He's a man of that strange composition,

Made up of all the worst extremities

Of youth and age.

Denham's Sophy.

To EXTRICATE. v. a. [extrico, Latin.]
To disembarass: to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.
We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.
These are reliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her vessels. Addison.

EXTRICATION. n. f. [from extricare.] The act of disentangling; disentanglement.
Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by transmutation than extrication. Boyle.

EXTRINSICAL. adj. [extrinsecus Latin.]
External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsic. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrinsecal.
A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsic agent: absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself. Digby.
Neither is the atom by any extrinsic impulse diverted from its natural course. Ray on the Creation.
Outward objects, that are extrinsic to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.

EXTRINSICALLY. adv. [from extrinsecal.]
From without.
If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be an error, almost all the world hath been mistaken. Glanville.

EXTRINSICK. adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.]
Outward; external.
When they cannot shake the main fort, they try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his most extrinsic adherents. Government of the Tongue.
Extrinsic modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself; but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated. Watts.

To EXTRUCTION. v. a. [extruo, extructum, Latin.] To build; to raise; to form into a structure.
EXTRUCTION. n. f. [from extruere.] A builder; a fabricator; a contriver.

The tumour sometimes arises by a general exudation out of the cutis. Wise's Surgery.
2. The matter issuing out by sweat from any body.
The gum of trees, shining and clear, is but a straining of the juice of the tree through the wood and bark; and Cornish diamonds, and rock rubies, which are yet more resplendent than gums, are the fine exudations of stone. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
If it hath more dew at noon than in the morning, then it seemeth to be an exudation of the herb itself. Bacon.
Cuckowspittle, or woodfere, that spumous frothy dew, or exudation, or both, is found especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary. Brown.

To EXUDE. v. n. [exudo, Latin.] To sweat out; to issue out by sweat.
Some perforations in the part itself, through which the humour included doth exude, may be observed in such as are fresh. Brown's Vulg. Err.
The juices of the flowers, are, first, the expressed juice; secondly, a volatile oil, wherein the smell of the plant presides; thirdly, honey, exuding from all flowers, the bitter not excepted. Arbutnot.

To EXUDE. v. a. To force out, or throw out, as by sweat.
To EXULCERATE. v. a. [exulcero, Lat.]
1. To make sore with an ulcer; to affect with a running or eating sore.
Cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exulcerate it, if they stay on long. Bacon.
That the saliva hath a virtue of macerating bodies, appears by the effects in taking away warts, sometimes exulcerating the jaws, and rotting the teeth. Ray on the Creation.
The stagnating serum turning acrimonious, exulcerates and putrifies the bowels. Arbutnot on Diet.
1. To afflict; to corrode; to enrage.

Thoughts, my tormentors, arm'd with deadly stings,
Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb
Or medicinal liquor can assuage. Milton's Agonistes.

EXULCERATION. n. f. [from exulcerate.]
1. The beginning erosion, which wears away the substance and forms an ulcer. Quincy.
2. Exacerbation; corrosion.

 And moulds and stamps anew the lover's mind. Dryd.
EY'ESORE. n. f. [eye and fore.] Something offensive to the sight.
 Hath the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always tied itself to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity, which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become now, at length, an eyefore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hooker.
 Ey, doff this habit; shame to your estate,
 And eyefore to our solemn festival. Shakespeare.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brown's Vulg. Err.

FACE. n. s. [face, French, from facies, Lat.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod. xxiv. 35.

A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon.

From beauty still to beauty ranging,

In every face I found a dart. Addison's Spectator.

2. Countenance; cast of the features; look; air of the face.

Kick'd out, we set the best face on't we could.

Dryden's Virg.

Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!

Who can't be silent, and who will not lye;

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;

And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

3. The surface of any thing.

A mist watered the whole face of the ground. Gen.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.

The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Ezek. xli. 14.

5. Visible state of affairs.

He look'd, and saw the face of things quite chang'd,

The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;

All now was turn'd to jollity and game,

To luxury and riot, feast and dance.

Milton.

This would produce a new face of things in Europe.

Addison.

6. Appearance; resemblance; look.

Keep still your former face, and mix again

With these lost spirits? run all their mazes with em;

For such are treasons. Ben. Jonson.

At the first shock, with blood and power stain'd,

Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;

Fury and art produce effects so strange,

They trouble nature, and her visage change. Waller.

His dialogue has so much the face of probability,

that some have mistaken it for a real conference.

Baker.

7. Preference; sight; state of confrontation.

Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall slay her before his face. Numb. xix. 3.

Jove cannot tear; then tell me to my face,

That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryd. Iliad.

8. Confidence; boldness; freedom from bashfulness or confusion.

They're winning, by his face,

To fasten in our thoughts that they have courage;

But 'tis not so. Shaks. Julius Caesar.

How many things are there which a man cannot, with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce alleged his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg.

Bacon.

You'll find the thing will not be done

With ignorance and face alone.

Hudibras.

You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have stolen.

L'Allegre.

This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations

Tillotson, Preface.

9. Distortion of the face.

Shame itself!

Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin
That has a name. Shaksp. Macbeth.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand. Shak.
A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgraced, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him. Bacon's Hen. VI.

So halt thou cheated Theseus with a wife,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free. Dryden.

The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido. Dryd.

8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real; as a false diamond.

False tears true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his fetters. Dryden's Æn.

9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.

FALSE. adv. Not truly; not honestly; not exactly; falsely.

What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st holiely; would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongly win. Shaksp. Macbeth.

FALSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To violate by failure of veracity.

Is't not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou falsed hath thy faith with perjury? Fairy Q.

2. To deceive.

Fair seemly pleasure each to other makes,
With goodly purposes there as they sit;
And in his falsed fancy he her takes
To be the fairest wight that lived yet. Fairy Queen.

3. To make feints; as fencers commonly do.

But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wary wise, and closely did await Advantage, whilst his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him strait,
And falsed off his blows t'illude him with such bait. Fairy Queen.

4. This word is now out of use.

FALSEHEARTED. adj. [false and heart.]
Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful; hollow.

The traiterous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and falsehearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, he noted. Bacon.

FALSEHOOD. n. s. [from false.]

1. Want of truth; want of veracity.

Artificer of fraud; he was the first
That practis'd falsehood under family shew. Milton.
All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsehood passing from words to things. South.

2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceitfulness; perfidy.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and colour serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heavenly form, pretended
To hellish falsehood, scare them. Milton.

3. A lie; a false assertion.

In your answers there remains falsehood. Job.

4. Counterfeit; imposture.

For no falsehood can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likeness. Milton.

FALSELY. adv. [from false.]

1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing profelytes and religion. Gou. of Tongue.

Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whose fleet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast,
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim. Dryd.

Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;
Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least
He would have giv'n one day to my request. Dryden.

Such as are treated ill and upbraided falsely find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to sooth their secret resentments. Addison's Spectator.

2. Erroneously; by mistake.

He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us. Smallidge's Sermons.

3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.

FALSENESS. n. s. [from false.]

1. Contrariety to truth.

2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.

Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tillotson.

3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity, and all falseness or foulness of intentions, especially to personated devotion. Hammond's Fundamentals.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traiterousness.

King Richard might create a perfect guest,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness. Shak.

The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.

FALSER. n. s. [from false.] A deceiver; An hypocrite. Now obsolete.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft coloured with simplicity;

And such end, pardie, does all them remain,
That of such false's friendship been fain. Spenser.

FALSIPIABLE. adj. [from falsify.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.

FALSIFICATION. n. s. [falsification, French, from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing so as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by misconstruction of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify Divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hooker.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coin is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits Divine honour. Bacon.

2. Confutation.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent posterity from searching after this issue, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Broome.

FALSIIFIER. n. s. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs. Boyle.

F A L

A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.
Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others that put their ill in the worst together.
L'Esrange.

To FA'LSIFY. v. a. [falsifier, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaketh; or, through falsified additions, propoeth that to the people of God as Scripture, which is in truth no Scripture.
Hooker.

The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man. Spenser.
Falsifying the balance by deceit. Amos.

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy; when Jews and Pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction.
Addison.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously flew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistaking nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate.
Knolles's History.

This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying the most important trust.
Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rash'd away, his ample shield is falsify'd, and round with jav'linus till'd. Dryden.

Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrell'd at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there: why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si græco fonte cadant especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:

*Ma si l'Ubergo d'Ambicra perfetto,
Che mai poter falsarlo in nessun canto,*

Arriosto, cant. xxvi.

Falsar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsify'd: for his shield was falsid, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalise the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

To FA'LSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South.

FA'LSITY. n. f. [falsitas, Latin.]

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately fix'd, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth.

Can you on him such falsities obtrude?
And as a mortal the most wise delude? Sandys.

Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imparts a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding. South.

2. A lie; an error; a false assertion or position.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the north, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities.

Glanville's Sceptis.

To FA'ITER. v. n. [faltar, to be wanting, Spanish; vaulter, a stammerer, Islandick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she. Fairy Queen.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-born sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue. Dryd.

He changes, gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his look, declare him guilty. Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king Shall falter under soul rebellious arms. Shakesp.
He found his legs falter. Wise man's Surgery.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far idiots are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover.
Locke.

To FA'ITER. v. a. To sift; to cleanse.

This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean filter'd from foulness, seeds and oats.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

FA'ITERINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

To FA'MBLE. v. a. [fambler, Danish.] To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.

Kalandar thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.

F A M

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the Scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened.
Hooker.

Let us chuse such noble counsel,
That war, or peace, or both at once, may be
As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakesp.
Our sweet
Recess and only consolation left

Familiar to our eyes! Milton's Paradise Lost.

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Watts.

5. Well acquainted with; accustomed; habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd
In temper and in nature, will receive

Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton.

The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodged in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I, could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation.
Gulliver's Travels.

Patient permit the sadly-pleasing strain,
Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain. Pope.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.

glorious brightness, the same in the beauty, motion, and virtue of this light may be perceived. Raleigh.

3. From FAR. In this sense it is used elliptically for a far, or remote place.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth. Deut. xxvii. 49.

4. Remoter of the two; in horsemanship, the right side of the horse, which the rider turns from him when he mounts.

No true Egyptian ever knew in horses
The far side from the near. Dryden's Cleomenes.

5. It is often not easy to distinguish whether it be adjective or adverb: as,

The nations far and near center'd in choice. Dryden.

FAR. n. f. [contracted from farrow.] The offspring of a sow; young pigs.

Sows, ready to farrow at this time of the year,
Are for to be made of and counted full dear;
For now is the loss of the far of the sow
More great than the loss of two calves of the cow. Tusser.

To FARCE. v. a. [farcio, Latin; farcir, French.]

1. To stuff; to fill with mingled ingredients.

Wrestling is a pastime which either the Cornishmen derived from Corineus, their first pretended
VOL. I.

founder, or at least it ministered some stuff to the farcing of that fable. Carew.

The first principles of Christian religion should not be farced with school points and private tenets.
Bp. Sanderfon.

2. To extend; to swell out.

'Tis not the balm, the sceptre, and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The enterprizing robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running 'tore the king. Shakefp.

FARCE. n. f. [from the verb; or from farcer, French, to mock.] A dramatick representation written without regularity, and stuffed with wild and ludicrous conceits.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

What should be great, you turn to farce. Prior.
They object against it as a farce, because the irregularity of the plot should answer to the extravagance of the characters, which they say this piece wants, and therefore is no farce. Gay.

FARICAL. adj. [from farce.] Belonging to a farce; appropriated to a farce.

They deny the characters to be farical, because they are actually in nature. Gay.

FARCY. n. f. [farcina, Italian; farcin, French.] The leprosy of horses. It is probably curable by antimony.

FARDEL. n. f. [fardello, Italian; fardean, French.] A bundle; a little pack.

Let us to the king: there is that in this fardel will make him scratch his beard. Shakespeare.
Who would fardels bear,

To groan and sweat under a weary life? Shakef.
To FARE. v. n. [pagan, Saxon; varen, Dutch.]

1. To go; to pass; to travel.

At last, resolving forward still to fare,
Until the blustering storm is overblown. Fairy Qu.
His spirits pure were subject to our sight,
Like to a man in shew and shape he far'd. Fairfax.
So on he far'd, and to the border comes
Of Eden. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Sadly they far'd along the sea-beat shore;
Still hear'd their hearts. Pope.

2. To be in any state good or bad.

So bids thee well to fare thy nether friend.
Fairy Queen.

A stubborn heart shall fare evil at the last. Ecclef.
Well fare the hand, which to our humble sight
Presents that beauty. Waller.

So in this throng bright Sacharissa far'd,
Oppress'd by those who strove to be her guard:
As ships, though never so obsequious, fall
Foul in a tempest on their admiral. Waller.

So fares the itag among th' enraged hounds;
Repels their force, and wounds returns for wounds. Denham.

But as a barque, that, in foul weather,
Toss'd by two adverse winds together,
Is bruised and beaten to and fro,
And knows not which to turn him to;
So far'd the knight between two foes,
And knew not which of them t' oppose. Hudibras.
If you do as I do, you may fare as I fare. L'Estrange.

Thus fares the queen, and thus her fury blows
Amidst the crowd. Dryden's Æn.

English ministers never fare so well as in a time of war with a foreign power, which diverts the private feuds and animosities of the nation. Addison.

Some are comforted that it will be a common calamity, and they shall fare no worse than their neighbours. Swift.

3. To proceed in any train of consequences good or bad.

Thus it fares when too much desire of contradiction causeth our speeches rather to pass by number than to stay for weight. Hocher.

So fares it when with truth falsehood contends.

4. To happen to any one well or ill: with it preceding in an impersonal form.

When the hand finds itself well warmed and covered,
let it refuse the trouble of feeding the mouth, or guarding the head, 'till the body be starved or killed, and then we shall see how it will fare with the hand. South.

5. To feed; to eat; to be entertained with food.

The rich man far'd sumptuously every day. Luke.
Feast your ears with the musick awhile, if they will fare so harshly as on the trumpet's sound.

Shakespeare's Timon.
Men think they have far'd hardly, if, in times of extremity, they have descended so low as to eat dogs; but Galen delivereth, that, young, fat, and gelded, they were the food of many nations.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Price of passage in a vehicle by land or by water. Used only of that which is paid for the person, not the goods.

He found a ship going to Tarlish; so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it to go with them unto Tarlish. Jon.

He passage begs with unregarded pray'r,
And wants two farthings to discharge his fare. Dryd.

2. Food prepared for the table; provisions.

But come, so well refresh'd, now let us play,
As meet is, after such delicious fare. Milton.

But when the western winds with vital pow'r
Call forth the tender grass and budding flow'r,
Then, at the last, produce in open air
Both flocks, and send them to their summer's fare. Dryden.

This is what nature's want may well suffice;
He that would more is covetous, not wise:

But since among mankind so few there are,
Who will conform to philosophick fare,
This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,
And mingle something of our times to please. Dryd.

Upon his rising up he ordered the peasant to set before him whatever food he had in his house: the peasant brought out a great deal of coarse fare, of which the emperor eat very heartily. Addison.

FAREWELL. adv. [This word is originally the imperative of the verb farewell, or fare you well; sis felix, abi in bonum rem; or bene sit tibi; but in time use familiarised it to an adverb, and it is used both by those who go and those who are left.]

1. The parting compliment; adieu.

But farewell, king; 'till thus thou wilt appear,
Freedom lives hence, and banishment is here. Shak.

Whether we shall meet again, I know not,
Therefore our everlasting farewell take;

For ever, and for eves, farewell, Cassius. Shakefp.

Be not amazed, call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever. Shakespeare.

An iron slumber shuts my swimming eyes;
And now farewell, involv'd in shades of night,
For ever I am ravish'd from thy sight. Dryden.

Farewell, says he; the parting sound scarce fell
From his saint lips, but she replied farewell. Dryd.

O queen, farewell! be still possess
Of dear remembrance, blessing still and blest! Pope.

2. It is sometimes used only as an expression of separation without kindness.

Farewell the year, which threaten'd so
The fairest light the world can show. Waller.

Treading the path to nobler ends,
A long farewell to love I gave;

Resolv'd my country and my friends
All that remain'd of me should have. Waller.

3. Its original verbal meaning is preserved when it is used plurally.

Farewell, master Silence: I will not use many words with you; fare you well, gentlemen, both. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

FAREWELL. n. f.

1. Leave; act of departure.

F A R

F A R

F A S

See how the morning opens her golden gates;
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun. Shak.
If chance the radiant sun with farewell sweet,
Extend his ev'ning beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
Attest their joy, that hill and valley ring. Milton.
As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell. Dryden.
Before I take my farewell of this subject, I shall advise the author for the future to speak his meaning more plainly. Addison.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective; leave-taking.

Several ingenious writers, who have taken their leave of the publick in farewell papers, will not give over so, but intend to appear again; though perhaps under another form, and with a different title. Spektator.

FARINA'CEOUS. adj. [from farina, Latin.]

Mealy; tasting like meal or flower of corn.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom for mankind is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panick, and millet.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

FARM. n. f. [ferme, French; peojm, provision, Saxon.]

1. Ground let to a tenant; ground cultivated by another man upon condition of paying part of the profit to the owner or landlord.

Touching their particular complaint for reducing lands and farms to their ancient rents, it could not be done without a parliament. Hayward.

2. The state of lands let out to the culture of tenants.

The lords of land in Ireland do not use to let out their land in farm, for term of years, to their tenants; but only from year to year, and some during pleasure. Spenser on Ireland.

It is great wilfulness in landlords to make any longer farms unto their tenants. Spenser.

TO FARM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To let out to tenants at a certain rent.

We are enforced to farm our royal realm,
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand. Shakespeare's Richard II.

2. To take at a certain rate.

They received of the bankers scant twenty shillings for thirty, which the Earl of Cornwall farmed of the king. Camden's Remains.

3. To cultivate land.

FARMER. n. f. [fermier, French; or from farm.]

1. One who cultivates hired ground.

Thou hast seen a farmer's dog bark at a beggar, and the creature run from the cur: there thou might'st behold the great image of authority; a dog's obeyed in office. Shakespeare.

2. One who cultivates ground, whether his own or another's.

Nothing is of greater prejudice to the farmer than the stocking of his land with cattle larger than it will bear. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FARMOST. n. f. [superlative of far.] Most distant; remotest.

A spacious cave, within its farmost part,
Was hew'd and fashion'd by laborious art,
Through the hill's hollow sides. Dryden's Æn.

FARNES. n. f. [from far.] Distance; remoteness.

Their nearness on all quarters to the enemy, and their farness from timely succour by their friends, have forced the commanders to call forth the utter-most number of able hands to fight. Carew.

FARRA'GINOUS. adj. [from farrago, Lat.]

Formed of different materials.
Being a confusion of knaves and fools, and a farraginous concurrence of all conditions, tempers, sexes, and ages, it is but natural if their determinations be monstrous, and many ways inconsistent with truth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FARRAGO. n. f. [Latin.] A mass formed confusedly of several ingredients; a medley.

FA'RRIER. n. f. [ferrier, French; ferra-rius, Latin.]

1. A shoer of horses.

But the utmost exactness in these particulars belong to farriers, saddlers, smiths, and other tradesmen. Digby.

2. One who professes the medicine of horses.

If you are a piece of a farrier, as every groom ought to be, get sack, or strong-beer to rub your horses. Swift.

TO FA'RRIER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise physick or chirurgery on horses.

There are many pretenders to the art of farriering
and cowlceching, yet many of them are very ignorant.
Mortimer.

FA'RRROW. n. f. [peanh, Saxon.] A litter of pigs.

Pour in sow's blood that hath litter'd
Her nine farrow. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

TO FA'RRROW. v. a. To bring pigs. It is used only of swine.

Sows ready to farrow this time of the year. Tusser.
The swine, although multiparous, yet being bifulcous, and only cloven-hoofed, is farrowed with open eyes, as other bifulcous animals. Brown.

Ev'n her, who did her numerous offspring boast,
As fair and fruitful as the sow that carry'd,
The thirty pigs at one large litter farrow'd. Dryden.

FART. n. f. [pept, Saxon.] Wind from behind.

Love is the fart
Of every heart;
It pains a man when 'tis kept close;
And others doth offend, when 'tis let loose. Suckling.

TO FART. v. a. [from the noun.] To break wind behind.

As when we a gun discharge,
Although the bore be ne'er so large,
Before the flame from muzzle burst,
Just at the breech it flashes first;
So from my lord his passion broke,
He farted first and then he spoke. Swift.

FA'RTHER. adv. [This word is now generally considered as the comparative degree of far; but by no analogy can far make farther or farthest: it is therefore probable, that the ancient orthography was nearer the true, and that we ought to write further and furthest, from forth, forth, forthest, forþon, forþen, Saxon;
the o and n, by resemblance of sound, being first confounded in speech, and afterwards in books.] At a greater distance; to a greater distance; more remotely; beyond; moreover.

To make a perfect judgment of good pictures,
when compared with one another, besides rules, there is farther required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden's Desiresney.

They contented themselves with the opinions, fashions, and things of their country, without looking any farther. Locke.

FA'RTHER. adj. [supposed from far, more probably from forth, and to be written further.]

1. More remote.

Let me add a farther truth, that without ties of gratitude, I have a particular inclination to honour
you. Dryden.

2. Longer; tending to greater distance.

Before our farther way the fates allow,
Here must we fix on high the golden bough. Dryden.

FA'RTHERANCE. n. f. [more properly furtherance from further.] Encouragement; promotion.

That was the foundation of the learning I have,
and of all the fartherance that I have obtained.
Afchan's Schoolmaster.

FARTHERMORE. adv. [more properly furthermore.] Besides; over and above; likewise.

Farthermore the leaves, body, and boughs of this tree, by so much exceed all other plants, as the greatest men of power and wordly ability surpass the meanest. Raleigh's History.

TO FA'RTHER. v. a. [more proper To further.] To promote; to facilitate; to advance.

He had farthered or hindered the taking of the town. Dryden.

FA'RTHEST. adv. [more properly furthest.]
See FARTHER.

1. At the greatest distance.

2. To the greatest distance.

FA'RTHEST. adj. Most distant; remotest.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hosher.

FA'RTHING. n. f. [peonðling, Saxon, from peopen, four, that is, the fourth part of a penny.]

1. The fourth of a penny; the smallest English coin.

A farthing is the least denomination or fraction of money used in England. Cocker's Arithmetick.

Else all those things we toil so hard in,

Would not avail one single farthing. Prior.

You are not obliged to take money not of gold or silver; not the halfpence or farthings of England.

Swift.

2. Copper money.

The parish find, 'tis true; but our churchwardens

Feed on the silver, and give us the farthings. Gay.

3. It is used sometimes in a sense hyperbolical: as, it is not worth a farthing; or proverbial.

His son builds on, and never is content,
'Till the last farthing is in structure spent. Dryden.

4. A kind of division of land. Not in use.

Thirty acres make a farthing-land; nine farthings a Cornish acre; and four Cornish acres a knight's fee. Carew.

FA'RTHINGALE. n. f. [This word has much exercised the etymology of Skinner, who at last seems to determine that it is derived from vertu garde: if he had considered what vert signifies in Dutch, he might have found out the true sense.]
A hoop; circles of whalebone used to spread the petticoat to a wide circumference.

With silken coats, and caps, and golden rings,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and farthingales and things.

Shakespeare.

Tell me,

What compass will you wear your farthingale?

Shakespeare.

Arthur wore in hall

Round table, like a farthingal. Hudibras.

Some will have it that it portends the downfall of the French king; and observe, that the farthingale appeared in England a little before the ruin of the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

She seems a medley of all ages,

With a huge farthingale to swell her fustian stuff,

A new commode, a topknot and a ruff. Swift.

FA'RTHINGSWORTH. n. f. [farthing and worth.] As much as is sold for a farthing.

They are thy customers; I hardly ever sell them a farthingsworth of any thing. Arbutnot.

FA'SCES. n. f. [Latin.] Rods anciently carried before the consuls as a mark of their authority.

The duke beheld, like Scipio, with disdain,

That Carthage, which he ruin'd, rise once more;

And shook aloft the fascies of the main,

To fright those slaves with what they felt before.

Dryden.

FASCIA.

FASCIA. n. f. [Latin.] A fillet; a bandage.

FA'SCIATED. adj. [from fascia.] Bound with fillets; tied with a bandage. Diſt.

FEE. n. f. [peoh, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]

1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord. All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgement of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum; for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burthen that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demesne in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special, is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies.

Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
Or sell fee-simples in his master's name.

Here's the Lord of the soil come to seize me for a stray, for entering his fee-simple without leave.

2. Property; peculiar.

What concern they?

The general cause? or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast?

3. Reward; gratification; recompense.

These be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts begotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee.

Not helping, death's my fee;
But if I help, what do you promise me?

E'er felt such grief, such terror, and despair. Pope.
6. To know; to be acquainted with.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little.
Shakespeare Henry VIII.
- FEEL. n. f. [from the verb.] The sense of feeling; the touch.
The difference of these tumours will be distinguished by the feel. Sharp's Surgery.
- FEELER. n. f. [from feel.]
1. One that feels.
This hand, whose touch,
Whose ev'ry touch would force the feeder's soul
To th' oath of loyalty. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
2. The horns or antennæ of insects.
Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennæ; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ,
I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning
the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted.
Derham's Physico-Theology.
- FEELING. participial adj. [from feel.]
1. Expressive of great sensibility.
O wretched state of man in self-division!
O well thou say'st a feeling declaration
Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision!
Sidney.
Thy wailing words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.
Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears
Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity. Shakesp.
2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.
A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare.
I had a feeling sense
Of all your royal favours; but this last Strikes through my heart. Sautberne.
- FEELING. n. f. [from feel.]
1. The sense of touch.
Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd;
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore?
Milton.
2. Power of action upon sensibility.
The apprehension of the good,
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse.
Shakespeare's Richard II.
3. Perception; sensibility.
Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects. Bacon.
Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it. Bacon.
As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.
- FEELINGLY. adv. [from feeling.]
1. With expression of great sensibility.
The princes might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly. Sidney.
He would not have talked so feelingly of Codrus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it.
Pope.
2. So as to be sensibly felt.
Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say

F E L

- This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shakesp.
He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh.
- FEET. n. f. The plural of foot.
His brother's image to his mind appears.
Indames his heart with rage, and wings his feet with fears. Pope.
- FEETLESS. adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.
Geoffrey of Bouloin brooded three feetless birds, called Allerions, upon his arrow. Camden.
- To FEIGN. v. a. [feindre, French; fingere, Latin.]
1. To invent; to image by an act of the mind.
Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd, Gorgons, and hydras, and chimæras dire! Milton.
No such things are done as thou sayest, but thou feign'st them out of thine own heart. Neb. vi. 8.
2. To make a show of.
Both his hands, most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And feigned to wash themselves incessantly. F. R.
3. To make a shew of; to do upon some false pretence.
Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.
4. To dissemble; to conceal. Now obsolete.
Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Queen.
- To FEIGN. v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention; to tell fa-bulously.
Therefore the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and flood;
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But muck for the time doth change his nature. Shakespeare.
- FEIGNEDLY. adv. [from feign.] In fiction;
not truly.
Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly in some of the heathens. Bacon.
- FEIGNER. n. f. [from feign.] Inventer;
contriver of a fiction.
And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the things feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poetry, and the poet. Ben Jonson.
- FEINT. participial adj. [from feign, for feigned; or feint, Fr.] Counterfeit;
seeming.
The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.
- FEINT. n. f. [feint, French.]
1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended to be.
Courtly's letter is but a feint to get off. Spectator.
2. A mock assault; an appearance of aiming at one part, when another is intended to be struck.
But, in the breast encamp'd, prepares
For well-bred feints and future wars. Prior.
- FE'LANDERS. n. f. Worms in hawks.
Ainsworth.
- To FELICITATE. v. a. [feliciter, French; felicitare, Lat.]
1. To make happy.
I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys;
And find I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness' love. Shakespeare.
What

F E L

What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would fill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey! Watts.

2. To congratulate.

They might proceed unto forms of speeches, felicitating the good, or depreciating the evil to follow. Brown.

FELICITATION. n. s. [French, from felicite.] Congratulation. Diér.

FELICITOUS. adj. [felix, Lat.] Happy. Diér.

FELICITOUSLY. adv. [from felicitous.] Happily. Diér.

FELICITY. n. s. [felicitas, Latin; felicité, Fr.] Happiness; prosperity; blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begins,
And grant that we, for whom thou didst die,
Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,
May live for ever in felicity. Spenser's Sonnets.

Others in virtue plac'd felicity;
But virtue join'd with riches and long life,
In corporal pleasure he, and careless ease. Milton.

The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Atterbury.

How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel? Rogers.

FELINE. adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is feline, or a long taper. Grew.

FELL. adj. [felle, Saxon.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.

It seem'd fury, discord, madness fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same. Fairfax.

So fellest foes,

Whose passions and whole plots have broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakespeare.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

I know thee, love! wild as the raging main,
More fell than tigers on the Lybian plain. Pope.

Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, fellest of the fell. Thomson.

FELL. n. s. [felle, Saxon.] The skin; the hide. Not used.

Wipe thine eye;

The gougiers shall devour them, flesh and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shakespeare.

The time has been my senses would have cool'd
To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir. Shakespeare.

TO FELL. v. a. [fellen, German.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.

Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shakespeare.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.

Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and felled him. Raleigh.

His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled. Howell.

On their whole host I flew Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
Their choicest youth, they only liv'd who fled. Milton.

2. It seems improperly joined with down or along.

Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him down,
And clest the circle of his golden crown. Dryden.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case. Dryden.

3. To hew down; to cut down.

Then would he seem a farmer that would fell
Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell. Hubb.

F E L

Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon;
In mortal battle doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their faulchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak. Dryden.

FELL. The preterite of To fall.

None on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

FELLER. n. s. [from fell.] One that hews down.

Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us. Jf. xiv. 8.

FELLIFLUOUS. adj. [fel and flu, Latin.] Flowing with gall. Diér.

FELLMONGER. n. s. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.

FELLNESS. n. s. [from fell.] Cruelty; savageness; fury; rage.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour sleep,
For very fellness loud he 'gan to weep. Fairy Queen.

FELLOE. n. s. [felge, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written fally or felly.

Out, out, thou trumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bowl the round nave down the hill of heav'n. Shakespeare.

Axe-trees, naves, felloes, and spokes were all molten. King.

FELLOW. n. s. [quasi, to follow, Minnow; from pe, faith, and lag, bound, Saxon, Junius; fallow, Scottish.]

1. A companion; one with whom we consort.

In youth I had twelve fellow like unto myself, but not one of them came to a good end. Ascham.

To be your fellow,
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no. Shakespeare. Tempest.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One soul should both inspire, and neither prove His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love? Dryden.

2. An associate; one united in the same affair.

Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabric mounts the walls. Dryden's Virgil.

3. One of the same kind.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may Without controul upon their fell us prey. Waller.

A shepherd had one favourite dog: he led him with his own hand, and took more care of him than of his fellows. L'Estrange.

4. Equal; peer.

So you are to be hereafter *fellow*s, and no longer servants. Sidney.

Chieftain of the rest
I chose him here: the earth shall him allow;
His *fellow*s late, shall be his subjects now. Fairfax.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.

When virtue is lodg'd in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice; the soul and the body do not seem to be *fellow*s. Auldson's Spectator.

6. One like or equal to another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow. Shakes.
An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his case, whereupon a pleasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns. Bacon.

F E L

Full fifteen thousand lusty *fellow*s
With fire and sword the fort maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men. Prior.

8. A word of contempt; the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.

Those great *fellow*s scornfully receiving them, as foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal Justice to make them suffer death by their hands. Sidney.

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodorigo, and *fellow*s that are 'scap'd. Shakespeare.

I have great comfort from this fellow's methinks
he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Opinion that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputation's banishment,
A fellow of no mark or likelihood. Shakespeare.

How oft the sight of means, to do ill deeds, Makes deeds ill done! For had'st thou not been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd;

Quoted and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind. Shakespeare.

The Moor's abuse'd by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow! Shakespeare.

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet. L'Estrange.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock; and the Sisyphian seed
By fraud and theft affects his father's breed. Dryden.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow, as this Mr. Wood, could have got his Majesty's broad seal. Swift.

You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobbler-like, the parson will be drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella. Pope.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.

The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man. Hayward.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues, or of any incorporated society.

There should be a million of three of the *fellow*s of brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed. Bacon.

TO FELLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match. Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

Imagination,
With what's unreal, thou co-active art,
And fellow'st nothing. Shakespeare.

FELLOW-COMMONER. n. s.

1. One who has the same right of common.

He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellow-commoners, all mankind. Locke.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

FELLOW-CREATURE. n. s. One that has the same creator.

Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellow-creatures, the brutes, in this lower world. Watts's Logic, Introduction.

FELLOW-HEIR. n. s. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.

The Gentiles should be fellow-heirs. Eph. iii. 6.

FELLOW-HELPER. n. s. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth. 3 John, 8.

FELLOW-LABOURER. n. s. One who labours in the same design.

FEL

My fellow-labourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication.

Dryden's Jew. Ded.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. f. One that has the same master.

Not lets think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire Gladly into the ways of God with man. Milton.

Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dames we serve. Waller.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children. Atterbury.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. f. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier. Pbil. ii. 25.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. f. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I pry'thee do not mock me, fellow-student.

If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance. Watts's Logick.

FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. f. One who lives
under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a feather in the balance with their private ends.

FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. f. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve? Dryden.

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers. Addison's Spectator.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. f. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them. Addison.

FELLOW-FEELING. n. f. [fellow and feeling.]

1. Sympathy.

It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellow-feeling of the misfortune of my brother.

2. Combination; joint interest: commonly in an ill sense.

Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellow-feeling. Arbuthnot.

FELLOWLIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.]

FELLOWLY. } Like a companion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage. Carew.

One seed for another to make an exchange
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange.

FELLOWSHIP. n. f. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; consort; society.

This boy cannot tell what he would have
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship.

From blissful bow'rs
Of amarantine shade, fountain, or spring,
By th' waters of life, where'er they sat
In fellowships of joy, the sons of light Blissed. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FEL

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good;
for men are made for society and mutual fellowship.

Calamy's Sermons.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination, and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement of society. Locke.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.

We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shakefp.

Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any settled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves. Hooker.

Most of the other Christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knolles.

3. Equality.

4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lighten's aught each man's peculiar load.

Paradise Regained.

O love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a sail! Shakefp.

6. Frequency of intercourse; social plea- sure.

In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods.

Bacon's Essays.

7. Fitness and fondness for festal enter- tainments, with good prefixed.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon.

8. An establishment in the college, with share in its revenue.

Coriolanus, having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetick.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general stock, so that they may every man have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss.

Cocker.

FELLY. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tyger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast doth felly him oppress. Spenser.

FEL-DE-SE. n. f. [In law.] He that commiteth felony by murdering himself.

FELON. n. f. [felon, French; felo, low Latin; fel, Saxon.]

1. One who has committed a capital crime.

I apprehend thee for a felon here.

The wily fox,
Chas'd even amid' the foids; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murderous deed. Dryden.

2. A whitlow; a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wifeman's Surgery.

FELON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.

Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,
Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stirred up so malicious despight!
Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shows of love to veil his felon hate. Pope.

FEM

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked;
traitorous; villainous; malignant; perfidious; destructive.

This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Wotton.

O thievish night!

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the mistle and lonely traveller? Milton.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies. Dryden.

FELONIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked.
Not used.

I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonious force of mine enemy. Spenser.

FELONY. n. f. [felonie, French; feloniam, low Latin; from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.

I will make it felony to drink small beer.

To know whether sheep are found or not see that the felt be loose. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To FELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite without weaving.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into kersey. Hale.

To FELTRE. v. a. [from felt.] To clot together like felt.

His felted locks, that on his bosom fell,
On rugged mountains briars and thorns resemble.

Fairfax.

FELU'CCA. n. f. [felen, Fr. felcon, Arab.]
A small open boat with six oars. Diél.

FEMALE. n. f. [femelle, French; femella, Latin.] A she; one of the sex which brings young; not male.

God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Gen. i. 27.

If he offer it of the herd, whether it be male or female, he shall offer it without blemish. Lev.

Men, more divine,
Indu'd with intellectual sense and soul,
Are masters to their females, and their lords.

Shakefp.

FEMALE. adj.

1. Not male.

Female of sex it seems.

Swarming next appear'd
The female bee, that feeds her husband drone

Milton.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

Other suns, perhaps,
With their attendant moons thou wilt descry,
Communicating male and female light;
Which two great sexes animate the world. Milton.

Add what wants
In female sex, the more to draw his love. Milton.

He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charm. Milton.

If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen.

Dryden.

3. FEMALE Rhymes. Double rhymes so called because in French, from which the term is taken, they end in a weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

Th'er-

F E N

Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable.

Cowley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems.

Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.

FEME COVERT. n. f. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron.

Blount.

FEME SOLE. n. f. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.

FEMINA'LITY. n. f. [from femina, Latin.] Female nature.

If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of femininity take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears.

Brown.

FE'MININE. adj. [from femininus, Latin.]

Thus we chastise the god of wine

With water that is feminine,

Until the cooler nymph abate

His wrath, and so incorporate.

Cleaveland.

2. Soft; tender; delicate.

Her heav'nly form

Angelick, but more soft and feminine.

Milton.

3. Effeminate; emasculated; wanting manliness.

Nimias was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine, and subjected to ease and delicacy.

Kaleigh's History.

FE'MININE. n. f. A she; one of the sex that brings young; a female.

O! why did God create at last

This novelty on earth, this fair defect

Of nature? And not fill the world at once

With men, as angels, without feminine?

Milton.

FE'MORAL. adj. [from femoralis, Latin.] Belonging to the thigh.

The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation.

Sharp.

FEN. n. f. [penn. Saxon; venne, Dutch.] A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor; a bog.

Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen.

I go alone,

Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen

Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen.

Shak.

The surface is of black fen earth.

Woodward.

He to Fortina's wat'ry marshes went;

A long canal the muddy fen divides,

And with a clear unsully'd current glides.

Addison.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors.

Deacy of Piety.

There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes.

L'Estrange.

To put them out of their parents view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them.

Locke.

Let us bear this awful corps to Cæsar,

And lay it in his fight, that it may stand

A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath.

Addison.

2. Inclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.

In vain did nature's wise command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships and men prophane,

Inva'de th' inviolable main;

Th' eternal fences overleap,

And pass at will the boundless deep.

Dryden.

Shall I mention make

Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?

Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,

Roars round the structure, and invades the fence?

Dryden.

F E N

Employ their wiles and unavailing care,
To pass the fences and surprise the fair.

Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.

I bruised my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence.

Shakespeare.

Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against.

Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.

If a throlle sing, he falls straight a capering:

He will fence with his own shadow.

Shakespeare.

A beauteous beifer in the wood is bred;

The sloping warriors aiming head to head,

Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound

The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;

They fence and push, and pushing, loudly roar,

Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore.

Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamblers company.

Locke.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplying.

Aronthnot and Pope.

FE'NCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without inclosure; open.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury,

And love in their weak bosoms is a rage

As terrible as hate, and as destructive:

So the wind roams o'er the wide fenceless ocean,

And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,

Alike from North, from South.

Roue's Jane Shore.

FE'NCER. n. f. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage; he that lets

Another chase, may warm him at his fire,

Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;

As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire.

Herbert.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off.

Digby.

FE'NCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence.

On, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fetch'd from fathers of war-proof. Shakespeare.
 - To strike at a distance.
The conditions of weapons, and their improvements, are the fetching afar off; for that outruns the danger, as it is seen in ordnance and muskets. Bacon.
 - To bring to any state by some powerful operation.
In smells we see their great and sudden effect in fetching men again, when they swoon. Bac. n.
At Rome any of those arts immediately thrives, under the encouragement of the prince, and may be fetch'd up to its perfection in ten or a dozen years, which is the work of an age or two in other countries. Addison on Italy.
 - To draw within any confinement or prohibition.
General terms may sufficiently convey to the people what our intentions are, and yet not fetch us within the compass of the ordinance. Sanderfon.
 - To produce by some kind of force.
These ways, if there were any secret excellence among them, would fetch it out, and give it fair opportunities to advance itself by. Milton.
An human soul without education is like marble in the quarry, which shews none of its beauties 'till the skill of the polisher fetches out the colours.
Addison's Spectator.
 - To perform: It is applied to motion or cause.
I'll fetch a turn about the garden, pitying
The pangs of barr'd affections; though the king
Hath charg'd you should not speak together. Shak.
When evening grey doth rise, I fetch my round
Over the mount. Milton.
To come to that place they must fetch a compass three miles on the right hand through a wood.
Kocher's History.

F E T

- To perform with suddenness or violence.
Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing loud.
Shakespeare.
The fox fetch'd a hundred and a hundred leaps at a delicious cluster of grapes. L'Estrange.
Talk to her of an unfortunate young lady that lost her beauty by the small-pox, she fetches a deep sigh.
Addison.
- To reach; to arrive at; to come to.
Mean time flew our ships, and straight we fetch'd
The syrens isle; a spleenless wind so stretcht
Her wings to waft us, and so urg'd our keel. Chapm.
If earth, industrious of herself, fetch day
Travelling East; and with her part averse
From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The hare laid himself down, and took a nap; for,
says he, I can fetch up the tortoise when I please.
L'Estrange.
- To obtain as its price.
During such a state, silver in the coin will never fetch as much as the silver in bullion. Locke.
- TO FETCH. v. n. To move with a quick return.
Like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about.
Shakespeare.
- FETCH. n. s. [from the verb.] A strata-gem by which any thing is indirectly performed; by which one thing seems intended and another is done; a trick; an artifice.
An envious neighbour is easy to find,
His cumbersome fetches are seldom behind;
His fetch is to flatter, to get what he can;
His purpose once gotten, a pin for thee then. Tusser.
It is a fetch of wit;
You laying these slight follies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i' th' working.
Shak. Hamlet.
But Sidrophel, as full of tricks
As rota men of politicks,
Stright cast about to over-reach
Th' unwary conqueror with a fetch. Hudibras.
With this fetch he laughs at the trick he hath plaid me. Still.
The fox had a fetch in't. L'Estrange.
From these instances and fetches
Thou mak'st of horses, clocks, and watches;
Quoth Mat, thou seem'st to mean
That Alma is a mere machine. Prior.
- FETCHER. n. s. [from fetch.] One that fetches any thing.
- FETID. adj. [fetidus, Latin; fetid, Fr.]
Stinking; rancid; having a smell strong and offensive.
Most putrefactions are of an odious smell; for they smell either fetid or mouldy. Bacon.
In the most severe orders of the church of Rome, those who practise abstinence, feel after it fetid hot erections. Arbutnot.
Plague, fiercest child of Nemesis divine,
Descends from Ethiopia's poison'd woods,
From stilted Cairo's filth and fetid fields. Thomson.
- FETIDNESS. n. s. [from fetid.] The quality of stinking.
- FETLOCK. n. s. [feet and lock.] A tuft of hair that grows behind the pattern joint of many horses; horses of a low size have scarce any such tuft. Farrier's Dict.
Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters.
Shakesp. Henry V.
White were the fetlocks of his feet before,
And on his front a snowy star he bore. Dryden.
- FETOR. n. s. [factor, Latin.] A stink;
a stench; a strong and offensive smell.
The fitor may discover itself by sweat and humour. Brown.
When the symptoms are attended with a feter of

F E V

- any kind, such a disease will be cured by acedent substances, and none better than whey. Arbutnot.
- FETTER. n. s. It is commonly used in the plural fetters. [from feet; pettere, Saxon.] Chains for the feet; chains by which walking is hindered.
Doctrine unto fools is as fetters on the feet; and like manacles on the right hand. Eccles. xxi. 19.
Drawing after me the chains and fetters whereunto I have been tied, I have by other men's errors failed. Raleigh.
Passions too fierce to be in fetters bound,
And nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryd.
The wretch in double fetters bound,
Your potent mercy may release. Prior.
Pleasure arose in those very parts of his leg that just before had been so much pained by the fetter.
Addison.
I thought her pride
Had broke your fetters, and assur'd your freedom.
A. Philips.
- TO FETTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to enchain; to shackle; to tie.
It is properly used of the feet, but is applied to other restraints.
Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his tickleness. Sidney.
My conscience! thou art fetter'd
More than my thanks and wrists. Shakesp. Cymb.
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread;
Charm ach with air, and agony with words. Shak.
Doth a master chide his servant because he doth not come, yet knows that the servant is chained and fettered, so as he cannot move? Bramhall.
A chain which man to fetter man has made;
By artifice impos'd, by fear obey'd. Prior.
- TO FETTER. v. n. [A cant word from feet.] To do trifling business; to ply
the hands without labour.
When your master is most busy in company, come in and pretend to fettle about the room; and if he chides, say you thought he rung the bell. Swift.
- FETUS. n. s. [faetus, Latin.] Any animal in embryo; any thing yet in the womb;
any thing unborn.
That paradox of Hippocrates some learned physicians have of late revived, that the fetus respire in the womb. Boyle.
- FEUD. n. s. [feahd, enmity, Saxon.]
Quarrel; contention; opposition; war.
Though men would find such mortal feuds
In sharing of their public goods. Hudibras.
In former ages it was a policy of France to raise,
and cherish intestine feuds and discords in Great Britain. Addison.
Scythia mourns
Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome. Addis.
- FEUDAL. adj. [feudalis, low Latin.] Pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures, by which lands are held of a superiour lord.
- FEUDAL. n. s. A dependance; something held by tenure; a fee; a feu.
Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England.
Hale.
- FEUDATORY. n. s. [from feudal.] One who holds not in chief, but by some conditional tenure from a superiour.
The duke of Parma was tempted to be true to that enterprize, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the feignory in chief of the pope, and the protection of Spain. Bacon.
- FEVER. n. s. [fevre, French; febris, Lat.]
A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermittent.
Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out
With

With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?
Shakefp. Henry V.

Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well.
Should not a lingering fever be remov'd,
Because it long has rag'd within my blood?
He had never dreamed in his life, 'till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of.
Shakefp. Dryden. Locke.

FE'VE'R. v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a fever.

The white hand of a lady fever thee!
Shake to look on't.
Her blood all fever'd, and with a furious leap,
She sprung from bed distracted in her mind.
Shakefp. Ant. and Cleop. Dryd.

FE'VE'RET. n. f. [from fever.] A slight fever; febricula.

A light feveret, or an old quartan ague, is not a sufficient excuse for non appearance.
Ayliffe.

FE'VE'FEW. n. f. [febris and fugo, Latin.] A plant.

Common feverfew is the sort used in medicine, and is found wild in many parts of England.
Miller.

FE'VE'RISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Diseased with a fever.

To other climates beasts and birds retire,
And feverish nature burns in her own fire.
When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow.
Creech. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Tending to fever.

A feverish disorder disabled me.
Swift to Pope.

3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We toils and turn about our feverish will,
When all our ease must come by lying still;
For all the happiness mankind can gain,
Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain.
Dryden.

4. Hot; burning.

And now four days the sun had seen our woes,
Four nights th' moon beheld th' incessant fire;
It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
And farther from the feverish North retire.
Dryd.

FE'VE'RISHNESS. n. f. [from feverish.] A slight disorder of the feverish kind.

FE'VE'ROUS. adj. [fevreux-se, French; from fever.]

Were feverous, and did tremble.
Shakefp. Coriol.

2. Having the nature of a fever.

All fev'rous kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs.
Milton.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.

It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain not.
Bacon's Natural Hist.

FE'VE'RY. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head
Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fev'ry.
Ben Jon. Caill.

FE'UILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

Of Homer's head I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval.
Jervas to Pope.

FE'UILLEMORT. n. f. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemot.

FE'UTERER. n. f. A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

FEW. adj. [feo, peopa, Saxon; fua, Danish.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.

We are left but few of many.
So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
So many would be great, so few be good;
Jerr.

For who would virtue for herself regard,
Or wed without the portion of reward?
Dryden.

On Winter seas we fewer storms behold,
Than foul diseases that infect the fold.
Dryden.

Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they converse with afford greater or less variety.
Locke.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score.
Pope.

Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few.
Swift.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age have come up to that character.
Bertley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.

To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this.
Hooker.

So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done?
Milton.

Thus Jupiter in few unfold's the charge.
The firm resolve I here in few disclose.
Dryden. Pope.

FEWEL. n. f. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood, coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed, falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fewel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions, and broils?
Hooker, Dedicat.

Others may give the fewel or the fire!
But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire.
Denham.

A known quantity of fewel, all kindled at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it.
Bentley Serm.

TO FE'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fewel.

Never, alas! the dreadful name,
That fewels the infernal flame.
Cowley.

FE'WNESS. n. f. [from few.]

Fewness and truth, 'tis thus.
Shakefp.

TO FEY. v. a. [veghen, Dutch.] To cleanse

a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
That all a dry Summer no water will yield,
By veying and casting that mud upon heaps,
Commodities many the husbandman reaps.
Tusser.

FIB. n. f. [A cant word among children.] A lie; a falsehood.

Destroy his fib or sophistry in vain,
The creature's at his dirty work again.
Pope.

Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I.
Pope.

TO FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie;

to tell lies; to speak falsely.

If you have any mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me.
Arbuth.

FI'BBER. n. f. [from fib.] A teller of fibs.

FI'BRE. n. f. [fibre, Fr. fibra, Latin.]

1. A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew.
Pope.

2. A fibre in physick, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastick; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries, and muscles.

Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the springs of life:
The name of father awes me still.
Dryden.

FI'BRIL. n. f. [fibrille, French.] A small fibre or string.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibils bound together, and divided into little cells.
Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

FI'BROUS. adj. [fibreux, French; from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscous is plain, for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture.
Bacon.

I saw Petreus' arms employ'd around
A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;
This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
The trunk was like a sapling in his hands.
Dryd.

The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines.
Arbuthnot on Alim.

FI'BULA. n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle.

Quincy.

FI'CKLE. adj. [ficol, Saxon.]

1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; changeful; without steady adherence.

Remember where we are,
In France amongst a fickle wavering nation.
A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows
Or likest hovering dreams,
The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train.
They know how fickle common lovers are;
Their oaths and vows how cautiously believ'd;
For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.
Dryden.

We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new.
Prior.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.

He would be loth
Us to abolish; lest the adversary
Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
Most favours!
Milton's Par. Lost.

FI'CKLENESS. n. f. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Baccha of whom she complained.
Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
In choice and change of thy dear loved dame.
Fairy Queen.

I am a soldier, and unapt to weep,
Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness.
Shakefp.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences.
Addison.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell, I found that what she liked one day she disliked another.
Addison.

5 D 2 FICKLY.

F I D

FICKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.

Do not now,
Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.

Having once recovered his fortress, he then gives the fig to his adversaries. Carver.

FICTILE. adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.

The case of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon's Natural History.

FICTION. n. s. [fictio, Latin; fictum, Fr.]

1. The act of feigning or inventing.
If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fictio of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it? Stillington.

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting: there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fictio. Dryden.

2. The thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poet's fictions;
If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
While that my soul the lives in afflictions. Sidney.
So also was the fictio of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Evah. Raleigh.

3. A falsehood; a lye.

FICTIOUS. adj. [fictus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.

Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single mullroses, single pinks and gilliflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglals, which have four leaves. Bacon.

Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases. Boyle.

Figures are properly modifications of bodies; for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.

2. Shape; form; semblance.

He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakespeare.

3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean, or grand.

The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
Ere I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth. Dryden.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Add.

A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either. Clarissa.

4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.

While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryden.

The speech, I believe, was not so much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.

Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow. Addison's Guardian.

Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figure, time will witness. Addison.

Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.

5. Magnificence; splendour.

If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and hurry, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocence. Law.

6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of somewhat else.

Several statues, which seemed at a distance of the whitest whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in snow. Addison.

7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.

In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the finews of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryden.

My favourite books and pictures sell;

Kindly throw in a little figure,

And let the price upon the bigger. Prior.

8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.

The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts's Logick.

9. A character denoting a number.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot

Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number

His love to Anthony. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the publick; but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bacon.

As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South's Sermons.

10. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.

We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: she works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and daubry beyond our element. Shakespeare.

He set a figure to discover

If you were tied to Rye or Dover. Hudibras.

Figure-singers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves. L'Estrange.

11. [In theology.] Type; representative.

Who was the figure of him that is to come. Romans.

12. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptance, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.

Silken terms precise,

Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,

Figures pedantical, these Summer flies

Have blown me full of maggot ostentation. Shak.

Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray. Stillingfleet.

They have been taught rhetoric, but never taught language; as if the names of the figures that embellished the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.

To FIGURE. v. a. [from figura, Latin.]

1. To form into any determinate shape.

Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.

Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold.

Dryd. Virg.

2. To show by a corporeal resemblance; as in picture or statuary.

Arachne figur'd how Jove did abuse

Europa like a bull, and on his back

Her through the sea did bear; so lively seen,

That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween. Spenser.

Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,

O'er figur'd world now travels with his eye. Pope.

3. To cover or adorn with figures, or images.

I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,

My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,

My gay apparel for an almshouse gown,

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shakspeare.

4. To diversify; to variegate with adventitious forms or matter.

But this effusion of such manly drops,

Startle mine eyes, and make me more amaz'd

Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n

Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shakspeare.

5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.

When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist in such as signifyeth, figureth, and representeth their end. Hooker.

There is a history in all men's lives,

Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shak.

Marriage rings are not of this stuff:

Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough

An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients. Dryd.

The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and actuated by his beams. Addison.

6. To imagine in the mind.

None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.

If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear

No thought can figure, and no tongue declare. Prior.

7. To prefigure; to foreshow.

Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun;

In this the heaven figures some event. Shakspeare.

8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.

Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.

9. To note by characters.

Each thought was visible that roll'd within,

As thro' a crystal glass the figur'd hours are seen. Dryden.

FILACER. n. s. [filarius, low Latin. filum.] An officer in the common Pleas, so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.

FILAMENT. n. s. [filament, French; filamenta, Latin.] A slender thread; a body slender and long like a thread.

The effluvium passing out in a smaller thread, and more lightened filament, it surrath not the bodies interposed. Brown.

The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient membrane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey.

The ever-rolling orb's impulsive ray

On the next threads and filaments does bear,

Which form the springy texture of the air;

And those still strike the next; 'till the light

The quick vibration propagate, the light. Blackm.

The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments

of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbuthnot.

FILBERT. n. s. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or husks, as corrupted from the full beard or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it; and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.

In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barberries, filberts, muskmelons, monkshoods of all colours. Bacon's Essays.

Thou hast a brain, such as it is indeed!

On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?

Yet in a filbert I have often known

Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone. Dorset.

There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.

FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.

He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have safe being, that none are continually filched and stolen. Spenser.

The champion robbeth by night,

And prowleth and filcheth by day. Tupper's Hush.

Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something,

nothing;

'T was mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;

But he that filches from me my good name,

Robs me of that which not enriches him,

And makes me poor indeed. Shakespeare's Othello.

He could discern cities like hives of bees, wherein every beedid nought else but sting; some like hornets, some like filching wasps, others as drones, Burton on Melancholy.

What made thee venture to betray,

And filch the lady's heart away. Hudibras.

The pismire was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods. L'Estr.

Fain would they filch that little food away,

While unrestrain'd those happy gluttons prey. Dryd.

But let me resume the file of my narration, which this object of books, best agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted. Wotton.

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.

All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file. Bacon.

The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually set apart an hour in a day to peruse those, and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters. Bacon.

The apothecary-train is wholly blind;

From files a random recipe they take,

And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.

Our present masters grow upon the file

To five and twenty thousand men of choice. Shak.

The valu'd file

Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle. Shak.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.

Those goodly eyes,

That o'er the files and musters of the war

Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Upon a tawny front. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.
So saying, on he led his radiant filer,
Dazzling the moon. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. [peol, Saxon; vijk, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.

The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging: the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made; and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Moxon.

A file for the mattocks and for the coulters.

1 Sam. xiii. 21.

The smiths and armourers on palfreys ride,
Files in their hands, and hammers at their side.

Dryden.

FILICUTTER. n. f. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.

Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chisels, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

TO FILE. v. a. [from filum, a thread.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire. Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.

From the day his first bill was filed he began to collect reports. Arbuth. and Pope's Marit. Scrib.

2. [From peolan, Saxon.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker.

FILIAL. adj. [filial-le, French; filius, Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.

My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from servile fear
To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milton.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought. Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.

And thus the filial godhead answer'd spoke. Milton.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads.

And when the parent rose decays and dies,
With a resembling face the daughter buds arise.

Prior.

FILIA'TION. n. f. [from filius, Latin.] The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation ariseth were eternal. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FILINGS. n. f. [without a singular; from file.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose. Brown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Felton on the Glass.

TO FILL. v. n. [pyllan, Saxon.]

1. To store 'till no more can be admitted.

Fill the waterpots with water, and they filled them up to the brim. John, ii. 7.

I am who fill

Infinitude, nor vacuumous space. Milton.

The celestial quires, when orient light
Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
Birth-day of Heav'n and Earth; with joy and shout
The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Milton.

2. To store abundantly.

Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
And lakes and running streams the waters fill. Milton.

3. To satisfy; to content.

He with his comforted Eve
The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
With admiration and deep muse to hear. Milton.
Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and superabundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings. Cicero.

—Ay, to see meat fill knaves, and wine heat fools. Shakespeare.

5. TO FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. TO FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
Whom pomp and greatness sits so loose about,
That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. TO FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
And opens still, and opens on his soul;
'Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. TO FILL up. To supply.

When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the underwork of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. TO FILL up. To occupy by bulk.

There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. TO FILL up. To engage; to employ.

Is it far you ride?
—As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
'Twixt this and supper. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily. Bacon.

4. TO FILL up. To grow full.

Neither the Palus Meotis nor the Euxine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shallower. Woodward.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp.

FILL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete satisfaction.

Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
That eye thereof her babes may suck their fill. Fairy Queen.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
Who scorneth peace shall have his fill of war. Fairfax.

When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock, and waters flowed out to your fill? 2 Esd. i. 20.

Mean while enjoy

Your fill, what happiness this happy state
Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milton.

Amid' the tree now got, where plenty hung Tempting so nigh, to pluck and eat my fill,
I spar'd not. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Which made me gently first remove your tears,
That so you might have room to entertain
Your fill of joy. Denham's Sophy.

Your barbarity may have its fill of destruction. Pope.

2. [More properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.

This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber. Mortimer's Husband.

FILLER. n. f. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.

'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryd. Aen. Dedic.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.

2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FILLET. n. f. [filet, French; filum, Lat.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breadth inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs. Dryden's Aen.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:
These morsels stay'd their stomach; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryden.

3. Meat rolled together and tied round.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakespeare.

The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapters, and filleted them. Ex. xxxiii. 28.

To FILIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.] To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shak.
Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun. Shaksp.
We see, that if you fillip a lute-string, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon's Natural History.

FILLIP. n. s. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

FILLY. n. s. [filoy, Welsh; filte, French.]

1. A young horse or mare. Not now used.

Geld fillies, but tits, yet a nine days of age,
They die else of gelding, and gelders do rage:
Young fillies so likely of bulk and of bone,
Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone. Tupper.
A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

2. A young mare; opposed to a colt or young horse.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile, Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakespeare.
I am joined in wedlock, for my fins, to one of those fillies who are described in the old poet. Addison's Spectator.

FILM. n. s. [pymlēpa, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
Had bred. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from grating or offending it. Graunt.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of sight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the fightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope.

To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whole filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Betrave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glittering textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
When light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

To FILTER. v. a. [filtro, low Latin; per flum trabere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.
Dilute this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew's Museum.

FILTER. n. s. [filtrum, Latin.]

VOL. I.

the vessel so that the liquor drips from it.

2. A strainer; a sence.

That the water passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.

FILTH. n. s. [filð, Saxon.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the wise seem vile;
Filth favour but themselves. Shaksp. King Lear.
Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet; for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Natural History.

How perfect then is man? from head to foot
Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.

Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ence,
To spare the toils that give him ha'pence. Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

FILTHILY. adv. [from filthy.] Nattily; foully; grossly.

It stuck filthily in camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

FILTHINESS. n. s. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness
Polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime, Spenser.
They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South's Sermons.

FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.

Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shak. Macbeth.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epic poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filter.] To strain; to percolate; to filter.

The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbutnot on Aliments.

FILTRATION. n. s. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having, by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. s. [Corrupted from femalē.]

The light Summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called fimble hemp. Mortimer.

Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,
In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, and serve at a end,
The fimble to spin, and the carle for her seed. Tupper.

FIN. n. s. [fin, Saxon; vin, Dutch.] The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends

Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shaksp. Othello.
Their fins consist of a number of gristly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. Moro.

Thus at half-ebb a rolling sea,
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watry herd, affrighted at the roar,
Rest on their fins awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way. Dryden.

Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashio'd to a fin. Addison's Ovid.

FIN-FOOTED. adj. [fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like fissipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in sauroitrous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet. Brown.

FINABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that which deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable. Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable. Hayward.

FINAL. adj. [final, French; finalis, Lat.]

2 Chron. ii. 14.

25. The particle out is added often without any other use than that it adds some force or emphasis to the verb.

While she proudly march'd about,
Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Susan by the by.

Cowley.

It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper.

Addison.

He was afraid of being insulted with Greek; for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning.

Addison's Spectator.

26. To FIND, is a word of very licentious and capricious use, not easily limited or explained; its first idea is the consequence of search; the second, equally frequent, is mere occurrence.

Fi'NDER. n. s. [from find.]

1. One that meets or falls upon any thing.

We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen. Shak. Twelfth Night.

2. One that picks up any thing lost.

Some lewd squeaking cryer,

May fill the finder's conscience, if they meet.

Donne.

O yes! if any happy eye

This roving wanton shall descry,

Let the finder surely know

Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe

The winged wand'rer.

Crashaw.

FINDFAULT. n. s. [find and fault.] A censurer; a caviller.

We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouth of all findfaults.

Shakespeare.

Fi'NDY. adj. [gepndig, Saxon.] Plump;

weighty; firm; solid. Not used. Thus the proverb,

A cold May and a windy,

Makes the barn fat and findy;

means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain.

Junius.

FINE. adj. [finne, French; fin, Dutch and Erse; perhaps from finitus, completed,

Latin.]

Spenser.

He was arrayed in purple and fine linen.

Luke.

2. Refined; pure; free from dross.

Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold.

Ezra.

3. Subtile; thin; tenuous: as, the fine spirits evaporate.

When the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object in the grosser, things shew greater:

but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium and the object in the finer.

Bacon.

4. Refined; subtilely excogitated.

In substance he promised himself money, honour, friends, and peace in the end; but those things were too fine to be fortunate, and succeed in all parts.

Bacon.

Whether the scheme has not been pursued so far as to draw it into practice, or whether it be too fine to be capable of it, I will not determine.

Temple.

5. Keen; thin; smoothly sharp.

Great affairs are commonly too rough and stubborn to be wrought upon by the finer edges or points of wit.

Bacon.

6. Clear; pellucid; transparent: as, the wine is fine.

Let the wine without mixture or stum be all fine,

Or call up the master.

Johnson.

7. Nice; exquisite; delicate.

Are they not senseless then, that think the soul
Nought but a fine perfection of the sense?

Davies.

The irons of planes are set fine or rank: they are set fine when they stand so shallow below the sole of the plane, that in working they take off a thin shaving.

Moxon's Mech. Exer.

8. Artful; dexterous.

The wisdom of all these latter times, in princes affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and shiftings of dangers and mischiefs, than solid and grounded counsel to keep them aloof.

Bacon.

9. Fraudulent; sly; knavishly subtle.

Through his fine handling, and his cleanly plays
He all those royal signs had stol'n away.

Hub. Tula.

10. Elegant; beautiful in thought or language.

To call the trumpet by the name of the metal was fine.

Dryden.

11. Applied to person, it means beautiful

 They taught us, indeed, to cloath, to dwell in houses,
 To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse:
 A fine exchange for liberty. Philips's Briton.
FINE. n. f. [fin, Cimbr.]
 1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment.
 The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an ericke. Davies on Ireland.
 2. Penalty.
 Ev'n this ill night your breathing shall expire, Paying the fine of rated treachery. Shak. K. John.
 3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty.
 The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him: if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, in the way of waste, attempt us again. Shakespeare.
 Besides finer set upon plays, games, balls, and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity. Addison.
 How vain that second life in other breath,
 Th' estate which wits inherit after death!
 Ease, health, and life for this they must resign,
 Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope.
 4. [From finis, Latin; fin, enfin, French.]
 The end; conclusion. It is seldom used but adverbially, in fine. To conclude; to sum up all; to tell all at once
In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased Zelmane, the powers of his spirit depending of her. Sidney.
 His resolution, in fine, is, that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other. Hooker.
 Still the fine's the crown;
 Whate'er the course, the end is the renown. Shak.
 Your daughter, ere she seems as won,
 Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
 Herself most chaste and absent. Shakespeare.
 The blessings of fortune are the lowest: the next are the bodily advantages of strength and health; but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind. L'Estrange.
In fine, he wears no limbs about him sound,
 With sores and sicknesses beleagu'ed round. Dryden.
In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece. Dryden.

The neighbours are coming out with forks and fireshovels, and spits, and other domestick weapons.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

FI'RESTONE. n. f. [fire and stone.]

The firestone, or pyrites, is a compound metallick fossil, composed of vitriol, sulphur, and an unmetallick earth, but in very different proportions to the several masses. The most common sort, which is used in medicine, is a greenish shapeless kind found in our clay-pits, out of which the green vitriol or copperas is procured. It has its name of pyrites, or firestone, from its giving fire on being struck against a steel much more freely than a flint will do; and all the sparks burn a longer time, and grow larger as they fall, the inflammable matter struck from off the stone burning itself out before the spark becomes extinguished. Hill's Matb. Med.
Firestone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FI'REWOOD. n. f. [fire and wood.] Wood to Doth reach, and all the firmament doth fill. Spenser.

I am constant as the northern star,
Of whose true, fixt, and resting quality,
There is no fellow in the firmament. Shakesp.
The Almighty, whose hieroglyphical characters are the unnumbered stars, sun and moon, written on these large volumes of the firmament. Raleigh.
The firmament expanse of liquid, pure,
Transparent, elemental air, diffus'd
In circuit to the uttermost convex
Of this great round. Milton's Paradise L. st.
The steeds climb up the first ascent with pain;
And when the midle firmament they gain,
If downward from the heavens my head I bow,
And see the earth and ocean hang below,
Ev'n I am seiz'd with horror. Addison's Ovid.
What an immensurable space is the firmament, wherein a great number of stars are seen with our naked eye, and many more discovered with our glasses! Darbham's Astro. Theology.

1. Properly; justly; reasonably.

Even so most fitly

As you malign our senators. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Where a man cannot fitly play his own part, if he have not a friend, he may quit the stage. Bacon.

I cannot fitlier compare marriage than to a lottery, for, in both, he that ventures may succeed, and may miss; and if he draw a prize, he hath a rich return of his venture: but in both lotteries there lie pretty store of blanks for every prize. Boyle.

The whole of our duty may be expressed most fitly by departing from evil. Tillotson.

2. Commodiously; meetly.

To take a latitude,

Sun or stars are fitliest view'd

At their brightest; but to conclude

Of longitudes, what other way have we

But to mark when, and where the dark eclipses be.

Donne.

An animal, in order to be moveable must be flexible; and therefore is fitly made of separate and small solid parts, replete with proper fluids. Arbutnot.

FITNESS. n. f. [from fit.]

1. Propriety; meetness; justness; reasonableness.

In things the fitness whereof is not of itself apparent, nor easy to be made sufficiently manifest unto all, yet the judgment of antiquity, concurring with that which is received, may induce them to think it not unfit. Hosker.

The queen being absent, 'tis a needful fitness

That we adjourn this court. Shakefp. Henry VIII.

Wer't my fitness

To let these hands obey my boiling blood,

They're apt enough to dislocate and tear

Thy flesh and bones. Shakefp. King Lear.

2. Convenience; commodity; the state of being fit.

Nor time nor place

Did then cohere, and yet you would make both:

They've made themselves, and that their fitness now

Does unmake you. Shakefp. Macbeth.

FITMENT. n. f. [from fit.] Something adapted to a particular purpose. Not used.

Poor beseeching: 'twas a fitment for

The purpose I then follow'd. Shakefp. Cymbeline.

FITTER. n. f. [from fit.]

1. The person or thing that confers fitness for any thing.

Sowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwall with French furze seed, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fitter of it for corn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. [from setta, Italian; setzen, German.] A small piece: as, to cut into fitters. Skinner.

FITZ. n. f. [Norman. from filis, a son, Fr.] A son. Only used in law and genealogy: as Fitzherbert, the son of Herbert; Fitzthomas, the son of Thomas; Fitzroy, the son of the king. It is commonly used of illegitimate children.

FIVE. adj. [fif, Saxon.] Four and one; half of ten.

And five of them were wise, and five were foolish. Matt.

No person, no incident, but must be of use to carry on the main design: all things else are like six fingers to the hand, when nature, which is superfluous in nothing, can do her work with five. Dryden.

Five herds, five bleating flocks, his pasture fill'd. Dryden.

Our British youth lose their figure by that time they are five and twenty. Addison.

FIVELEAVED Grass. n. f. Cinquefoil; a species of clover.

To FIX. v. a. fixer, French; fixus, Latin.]

1. To make fast, firm, or stable.

Hell heard th' unsufferable noise, hell saw Heav'n running from heav'n, and would have fled Affrighted, but that fate had fix'd too deep Her dark foundations, and too fast had bound. Milt.

2. To settle; to establish invariably.

Brightest seraph! tell In which of all these orbs hath man His fixed seat, or fixed seat hath none, But all these shining orbs his choice to dwell! Milt.

One loves fixed laws, and the other arbitrary power. Temple.

When custom hath fixed his eating to certain stated periods, his stomach will expect victuals at the usual hour. Locke.

3. To direct without variation.

Why are thine eyes fix'd to the fullen earth, Gazing at that which seems to dim thy sight! Shak. Thus while the Trojan prince employs his eyes, Fix'd on the walls with wonder and surprize. Dryd.

4. To deprive of volatility.

We pronounce concerning gold, that it is fixed. Locke.

5. To pierce; to transfix. A sense purely Latin.

While from the raging sword he vainly flies, A bow of steel shall fix his trembling thighs. Sandys.

6. To withhold from motion.

To FIX. v. n.

1. To settle the opinion; to determine the resolution.

If we would be happy, we must fix upon some foundation that can never deceive us. L'Estrange.

He made himself their prey,

T' impose on their belief, and Troy betray;

Fix'd on his aim, and obstinately bent

To die undaunted, or to circumvent. Dryden's Aen.

Here hope began to dawn; resolv'd to try,

She fix'd on this her utmost remedy,

Death was behind; but hard it was to die. Dryden.

In most bodies not propagated by seed, it is the colour we must fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

2. To rest; to cease; to wander.

Your kindness banishes your fear, Resolv'd to fix for ever here. Waller.

3. To lose volatility, so as to be malleable.

In the midst of molten lead, when it beginneth to congeal, make a little dent, and put quicksilver, wrapped in a piece of linen, in that hole, and the quicksilver will fix and run no more, and endure the hammer. Bacon's Natural History.

FIXATION. n. f. [French.]

1. Stability; firmness; steadiness.

Your fixation in matters of religion will not be more necessary for your soul's than your kingdom's peace. King Charles.

2. Residence in a certain place.

To light, created in the first day, God gave no proper place or fixation. Raleigh's History.

3. Confinement; forbearance of extension.

They are subject to errors from a narrowness of soul, a fixation and confinement of thought to a few objects. Watts.

4. Want of volatility; destruction of volatility.

Upon the compound body three things are chiefly to be observed; the colour, the fragility or pliancy, and the volatility or fixation, compared with the simple bodies. Bacon.

It is more difficult to make gold of other metals less ponderous and less material, than to make silver of lead or quicksilver, both of which are more ponderous than silver; so that they need rather a degree of fixation than any condensation. Bacon.

5. Reduction from fluidity to firmness.

Salt dissolved upon a fixation returns to its affected cubes. Clarv.

FIXEDLY. adv. [from fixed.]

1. Certainly; firmly; in a manner settled and established.

If we pretend that the distinction of species, or sorts, is fixedly established by the real and secret constitutions of things. Locke.

FIXEDNESS. n. f. [from fixed.]

1. Stability; firmness.

2. Want or loss of volatility.

Fixedness, or a power to remain in the fire unconsumed, is an idea that always accompanies our complex idea signified by the word gold. Locke.

3. Solidity; coherence of parts.

Fluid or solid comprehend all the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion of the particles of bodies. Bentley.

4. Steadiness; settled opinion or resolution.

A fixedness in religion will not give my conscience leave to consent to innovations. King Charles.

FIXIDITY. n. f. [from fixed.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility. A word of Boyle.

Bodies mingled by the fire are differing as to the fixidity and volatility, and yet are so combined by the first operation of the fire, that itself does scarce afterwards separate them. Boyle.

FIXITY. n. f. [fixité, French.] Coherence of parts, opposed to volatility.

And are not the sun and fixed stars great earths vehemently hot, whose heat is conserved by the greatness of the bodies, and the mutual action and reaction between them, and the light which they emit, and whose parts are kept from fuming away, not only by their fixity, but also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them? Newton's Opticks.

FIXTURE. n. f. [from fix.]

1. Position.

The fixture of her eye hath motion in't, As we were mock'd with art. Shakefp. Winter's Tale.

Dist.

FLACCID. adj. [flaccidus, Latin.] Weak; limber; not stiff; lax; not tense.

The bowing and inclining the head is found in the great flower of the sun: the cause I take to be is, that the part against which the sun beareth waxeth more faint and flaccid in the stalk, and thereby less able to support the flower. Bacon.

They whose muscles are weak or flaccid, are unapt to pronounce the letter r. Holder.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet as he finds the fibres are too flaccid and produce funguses, or as they harden and produce callosities. Arbutnot.

FLACCIDITY. n. f. [from flaccid.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension; want of stiffness.

There

There is neither fluxion nor pain, but flaccidity joined with insensibility. Wise man's Surgery.
To FLAG. v. n. [flaggeren, Dutch; pleogan, Saxon, to fly.

1. To hang loose without stiffness or tension.

Beds of cotton wool hung up between two trees, not far from the ground; in which, flagging down in the middle, men, wives and children lie together. Abbot.

The jades

That drag the tragick melancholy night,
 Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings
 Clip dead men's graves. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

It keeps those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibility and weight, would flag or curl.

Boyle's Spring of the Air.

Like a fiery meteor sunk the sun,
 The promise of a storm; the shifting gales
 Forsake by fits, and fill the flagging sails. Dryden.

2. To grow spiritless or dejected.

My flagging soul lies under her own pitch,
 Like towl in air too damp, and lags along
 As if she were a body in a body:
 My senses too are dull and stupify'd,
 Their edge rebated: sure some ill approaches.

Dryden's Don Sebastian.

3. To grow feeble; to lose vigour.

Juice in language is somewhat less than blood: for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, flagging, poor, starved, scarce covering the bone, and shews like stones in a sack: some men, to avoid redundancy, run into that; and while they strive to hinder ill blood or juice, they lose their good. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

His stomach will want victuals at the usual hour, either fretting itself into a troublesome excess, or flagging into a downright want of appetite. Locke.

Fame, when it is once at a stand, naturally flags and languishes. Addison's Spectator.

If on sublimer wings of love and praise,
 My love above the starry vault I raise,
 Lur'd by some vain conceit of pride or lust,
 I flag, I drop, and flutter in the dust. Arbutnot.

He sees a spirit hath been raised against him, and he only watches till it begins to flag: he goes about watching when to devour us. Swift.

The pleasures of the town begin to flag and grow languid, giving way daily to cruel inroads from the spleen. Swift.

To FLAG. v. a.

1. To let fall into feebleness; to suffer to droop.

Take heed, my dear, youth flies apace;
 As well as Cupid, Time is blind:
 Soon must those glories of thy face
 The fate of vulgar beauty find:
 The thousand loves, that arm thy potent eye,
 Must drop their quivers, flag their wings, and die.

Prior.

2. [From flag, a species of stone.] To lay with broad stone.

The sides and floor were all flagged with excellent marble. Sandys.

A white stone used for flagging floors. Woodward.

FLAG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A water plant with a bladed leaf and yellow flower, so called from its motion in the wind.

She took an ark of bulrushes, and laid it in the flags by the river's brink. Ex. ii. 3.

Can bulrushes but by the river grow?

Can flags there flourish where no waters flow? Sandys.
 There be divers fishes that cast their spawn on flags or stones. Walton's Angler.

Cut flag roots, and the roots of other weeds. Mortimer's Husband.

2. The colours or ensign of a ship or land-forces, by which signals are made at sea, or regiments are distinguished in the field.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
 Before the eye and prospect of your town,
 Have hither march'd to your endamage. Shaksp.

VOL. I.

He hangs out as many flags as he descryeth vessels; square, if ships; if galleys, pendants. Sandys.
 Democracies are less subject to sedition than where there are stirps or nobles: for if men's eyes are upon the persons, it is for the business sake as fittest, and not for flags of pedigree. Bacon.

Let him be girt

With all the grisly legion that troop
 Under the footy flag of Acheron, Harpies and hydras, or all the monstrous forms
 'Twixt Africa and Inde, I'll find him out,
 And force him to restore his purchase back,
 Or drag him by the curls to a foul death. Milton.

The French and Spaniards, when your flags appear, Forget their hatred, and consent to fear. Waller.

The interpretation of that article about the flag, is a ground at pleasure for opening a war. Temple.

In either's flag the golden serpents bear,
 Erecting crests alike, like volumes rear,
 And mingle friendly hissings in the air. Dryden.

Then they, whose mothers, frantic with their fear,
 In woods and wilds the flag of Bacchus bear,
 And lead his dances with dihevel'd hair. Bryden.

3. A species of stone used for smooth pavements, [flache, old French.]

Part of two flags striated, but deeper on one side than the other. Woodward on Fossils.

Flagstone will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata. Woodward on Fossils.

FLAG BROOM. n. f. [from flag and broom.]

A broom for sweeping flags or pavements, commonly made of birch-twigs, or of the leaves of the dwarf palm, imported from Spain.

By Bridewell all descend,

As morning pray'r and flagellation end. Garth.
FLAGGINESS. n. f. [from flaggy.] Laxity; limberness; want of tension.

FLAGGY. adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber not stiff; not tense.

His flaggy wings, when forth he did display,
 Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
 Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way. Fairy Q.
 That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
 And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry. Dryd.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a colewort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple. Bacon.

FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Lat.]

1. Wicked; villainous; atrocious.

No villainy or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found, that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

There is no working upon a flagitious and perverse nature by kindness and discipline. L'Estrange.

First, those flagitious times.
 Pregnant with unknown crimes,
 Conspire to violate the nuptial beds. Roscommon.

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Addison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
 Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
 Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
 Nor fear a dearth in these flagitious times. Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, sad outcast of each church and state,
 And, harder still, flagitious yet not great. Pope.
FLAGITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from flagitious.]

More had sent him by a suitor in Chancery two silver flagons. Bacon's Apophib.

Did they coin pisspots, bowls, and flagons Int' officers of horse and dragoons? Hudibras.

His trusty flagon, full of potent juice,
 Was hanging by, worn thin with age and use. Roscommon.

One flagon walks the round, that none should think
 They either change, or stint him in his drink. Dryd.

FLAGRANCY. n. f. [flagrantia, Latin.] Burning; heat; fire.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes, as the sight and the touch are the things desired, and therefore the spirits resort to those parts. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FLAGRANT. adj. [flagrans, Latin.]]

1. Ardent; burning; eager. It is always used figuratively.

A thing which filleth the mind with comfort and heavenly delight, stirreth up flagrant desires and affections, correspondent unto that which the words contain. Hooker.

2. Glowing; flushed.

See Sappho, at her toilet's greasy task,
 Then issuing flagrant to an evening mask:
 So morning insects, that in muck begun,
 Shine, buz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

3. Red; imprinted red.

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
 The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into notice.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.

With equal poise let steady justice sway,
 And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
 But, 'till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay. Smith.

FLAGRA'TION. n. f. [flagro, Latin.] Burning.

FLAGSTAFF. n. f. [flag, and staff.] The staff on which the flag is fixed.

 On wings of all the winds to combat flies:
 His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,
 And bloody crosses on his flag staffs rise. Dryd.

FLAIL. n. f. [flagellum, Latin; fliegel, German.] The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; the tool of the thresher.

Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight,
 Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,
 Fell gently down as if they struck their friends. Shak. Hen. VI.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
 His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,
 That ten day-labourers could not end. Milton.

In this pile shall reign a mighty prince,
 Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense. Dryd.
 The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms and government. Locke.

The thresher, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;
 The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.

FLAKE. n. f. [flocus, Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles like red flakes in the element,
 when the weather is hottest. Sidney.
 And from his wide devouring oven sent

5 F

A flake

A flake of fire, that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost all affear'd. Fairy Q.
The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burnet.

Small drops of a misting rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow.
Grew's Cosmolog.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scurf rising up. Addis.

2. A stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,
As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.

The teeth cut away great flakes of the metal, till it received the perfect form the teeth would make.
Moxon.

To FLAKE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,
Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow.
Pope's Odyf.

To FLAKE. v. n. To break into laminæ; to part in loose bodies.

FLAKY, adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the East. Shakef.
The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire. Pope.

Hence, when the snows in Winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in Summer, and those banks disdain.
Blackm.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminæ.

Flam. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lye; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old aruspicy and aug'ry. Hudibras.

Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat, flam and delusion. South.

What are most of the histories of the world but lyes? Lyes immortalized and consigned over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

To FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To de- ceive with a lye. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flam'd,
To damn ourselves t' avoid being damn'd. Hudibras.

God is not to be flammed off with lyes, who knows exactly what thou canst do, and what not. South.

FLAM'BEAU. n. f. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy.
Dryden.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death.
Addison's Guardian.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme, French.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, fume, or exhalation heated red hot, that is, so hot as to shine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame. Newton's Opt.

What flame, what lightning e'er
So quick an active force did bear! Cowley.

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him now.
Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; bright- ness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:
In both our English genius is express'd,
Lofty and bold but negligently dress'd. Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame. Pope.

5. Passion of love.

My heart's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire. Cowley.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:
I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

To FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakef.

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton.

Hell all around
As one great furnace flam'd. Milton.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECO'LOURED. adj. [flame and colour.]

Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in flame- coloured stockings. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

1. Inflamed; burning; blazing.

My thoughts imprison'd in my secret woes,
With flamy breaths do issue oft in sound. Sidney.

2. Having the nature of flame.

The vital spirits of living creatures are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame, being free, will not well mingle, yet bound in by a body they will. Bacon.

FLANK. n. f. [flanc, French, according to Menage, from lanc; more probably from latus, Latin.]

1. That part of the side of a quadruped near the hinder thigh.

The belly shall be eminent by shadowing the flank.
Peacem.

2. [In men.] The lateral part of the lower belly.

He said, and pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent;
Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corset pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downward near his flank descends. Pope.

3. The side of any army or fleet.

Great ordnance and small shot thundered and showered upon our men from the rampier in front, and from the galleys that lay at sea in flank.
Bacon's War with Spain.

Gray was appointed to stand on the left side, in such sort as he might take the flank of the enemy.
Hayward.

To right and left the front Divided, and to either flank retir'd. Milton.

4. [In fortification.] That part of the bastion which reaches from the curtain to the face, and defends the opposite face, the flank and the curtain. Harris.

To FLANK. v. a.

1. To attack the side of a battalion or fleet.

2. To be posted so as to overlook or com- mand any pass on the side.

With fates averse against their king's command,
Arm'd on the right, and on the left they stand,
And flank the passage. Dryden's Aen.

3. To secure on the side.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,
Which, flank'd with rocks, did close in covert lay.
Dryden.

FLA'NKER. n. f. [from flank.] A fortifica- tion jutting out so as to command the side of a body marching to the assault.

The Turks, discouraged with the loss of their fellows, and sore beaten by the Spaniards out of their flankers, were enforced to retire. Knolles.

Like storms of hail the stones fell down from high,
Cast from the bulwarks, flankers, ports, and towers.
Fairf.

To FLA'NKER. v. a. [flanquer, French.]

To defend by lateral fortifications.

FLA'NNEL. n. f. [gwlanen, Welsh; from gwlan, wool, Davies.] A soft nappy stuff of wool.

I cannot answer the Welch flannel. Shakespeare.

FLAP. n. f. [læppe, Saxon.]

1. Any thing that hangs broad and loose, fastened only by one side.

There is a peculiar provision for the windpipe, that is, a cartilaginous flap upon the opening of the larynx, which hath an open cavity for the admission of the air. Brown.

Some surgeons make crucial incision upon the supposition that the wound will more easily heal by turning down the flaps. Sharp.

2. The motion of any thing broad and loose.

3. [A disease in horses.]

When a horse has the flaps, you may perceive his lips swelled on both sides of his mouth; and that which is in the blisters is like the white of an egg: cut some flashes with a knife, and rub it once with salt, and it will cure. Farrier's Dict.

To FLAP. v. a. [From the noun.]

1. To beat with a flap, as flies are beaten.

A hare, hard put to it by an eagle, took sanctuary in a ditch with a beetle: the eagle flap'd off the former, and devoured the other. L'Estrange.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, that stinks and stings.
Pope.

2. To move with a flap or noise made by the stroke of any thing broad.

With fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions oft, to extricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound. Phillips.

Three times, all in the dead of night,
A bell was heard to ring;
And shrieking at her window thrice
The raven flap'd his wing. Tickel.

To FLAP. v. n.

1. To ply the wings with noise.

'Tis common for a duck to run flapping and fluttering away, as if maimed, to carry people from her young. L'Estrange.

The dire flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel. Dryden's Æn.

2. To fall with flaps or broad parts depending.

When suffocating mists obscure the morn,
Let thy worst wig, long us'd to storms, be worn;
This knows the powder'd footman, and with care
Beneath his flapping hat secures his hair. Gay.

FLA'PDRAGON. n. f. [from a dragon supposed to breathe fire.]

1. A play in which they catch raisins out of burning brandy, and, extinguishing them by closing the mouth, eat them.

2. The thing eaten at flapdragon.

He plays at quoits well, and eats conger and fennel, and drinks candles ends for flapdragons, and rides the wild mare with the boys. Shakespeare.

To FLA'PDRAGON. v. a. [from the noun.]

To swallow; to devour. Low cant.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flapdragoned it. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

FLA'PEARED. adj. [flap and ear.] Having loose and broad ears.

A whoreson, beetle-headed flapeared knave. Shak.

To FLARE. v. a. [from fladeren, to flutter, Dutch, Skinner; perhaps accidentally changed from glare.]

1. To glitter with transient lustre.

Doctrine and life, colours, and light, in one
When they combine and mingle, bring
A strong regard and awe; but speech alone
Doth vanish like a flaring thing,
And in the ear, not conscience, ring. Herbert.

2. To glitter offensively.

When the sun begins to sing
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To arched walks of twilight groves. Milton.

3. To be in too much light.

I cannot stay
Flaring in sunshine all the day. Prior.

4. To flutter with a splendid show.

She shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendant flaring 'bout her head.
Shakespeare.

FLASH. n. f. [φλαξ, Minsterw.]

1. A sudden, quick, transitory blaze.

When the cross blue lightning seem'd to open
The breast of heav'n, I did present myself
Ev'n in the aim and very flash of it. Shakespeare.

'We see a flash of a piece is seen sooner than the noise is heard. Bacon's Natural History.

One with a flash begins, and ends in smoke;
The other out of smoke brings glorious light.
Roscommon.

And as Ægeon, when with heaven he strove,
Defy'd the fork'y lightning from afar,
At fifty mouths his flaming breath expires,
And flash for flash returns, and fires for fires. Dryd.

2. Sudden burst of wit or merriment.

Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs? your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar? Shakespeare.

Wicked men prefer the light flashes of a wanton mirth, which for a while suspend reflection, and hide the sinner from himself, to such discourses as awaken conscience. Rogers.

3. A short transient state.

The Persians and Macedonians had it for a flash.
Bacon.

4. A body of water driven by violence.

To FLASH. v. n.

1. To glitter with a quick and transient flame.

This salt powdered, and put into a crucible, was,
by the injection of well kindled charcoal, made to flash divers times, almost like melted nitre. Boyle.

2. To burst out into any kind of violence.

By day and night he wrongs me; ev'ry hour

He flashes into one gross crime or other,
That sets us all at odds. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To break out into wit, merriment, or bright thought.

They flash out sometimes into an irregular greatness of thought. Felton on the Classics.

To FLASH. v. a. To strike up large bodies of water from the surface.

With his raging arms he rudely flash'd
The waves about, and all his armour swept,
That all the blood and filth away was wash'd.
Fairy Queen.

If the sea-water be flashed with a stick or oar,
the same casteth a shining colour, and the drops resemble sparkles of fire. Carew.

FLA'SHER. n. f. [from flash.] A man of more appearance of wit than reality. Diſt.

FLA'SHILY. adv. [from flashy.] With empty show; without real power of wit, or solidity of thought.

FLA'SHY. adj. [from flash.]

1. Empty; not solid; showy without substance.

Flashy wits cannot fathom the whole extent of a large discourse. Digby on the Soul, Dedication.

When they list, their less and flashy songs
Grate on their serannell pipes of wretched straw.
Milton.

This mean conceit, this darling mystery,
Which thou think'st nothing, friend! thou shalt not buy;

Nor will I change for all the flashy wit. Dryden.

2. [From flaccidus, Skinner.] Insipid; without force or spirit.

Distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon's Essays.

The tastes that most offend in fruits, herbs, and roots, are bitter, harsh, sour, waterish or flashy.
Bacon's Natural History.

FLASK. n. f. [flasque, French.]

1. A bottle; a vessel.

Then for the Bourdeaux you may freely ask;
But the Champagne is to each man his flask. King.

2. A powder-horn.

Powder in a skilless soldier's flask
Is set on fire. Shakespeare.

FLA'SKET. n. f. [from flask.] A vessel in which viands are served.

Another plac'd
The silver stands with golden flaskets grac'd. Pope.

FLAT. adj. [plat, French.]

1. Horizontally level without inclination.

Thou, all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' th' world. Shakespeare.

Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton.

The houses are flat roofed to walk upon, so that every bomb that fell on them would take effect.
Addison on Italy.

2. Smooth; without protuberances.

In the dawning of the next day we might plainly discern it was a land flat to our sight, and full of boisage. Bacon.

3. Not elevated; fallen; not erect.

Cease t' admire, and beauty's plumes
Fall flat, and shrink into a trivial toy,
At every sudden slighting quite abash'd. Milton.

4. Level with the ground.

In them is plainest taught, and easiest learnt,
What makes a nation happy, and keeps it so,
What ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat. Milton.

That Christ-church stands above ground, and that the church of Westminster lies not flat upon it, is your lordship's commendation. South.

5. Lying prostrate; lying along.

The wood-born people fall before her flat,
And worship her as goddess of the wood. Fairy Q.

That lamentable wound;
Which laid that wretched prince flat on the ground.
Daniel.

6. [In painting.] Wanting relief; wanting prominence of the figures.

7. Tasteless; insipid; dead.

He, like a puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Shakespeare.

Taste so divine! that what of sweet before
Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh.
Milton.

The miry fields,
Rejoicing in rich mold, most ample fruit
Of beauteous form produce; pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat. Philips.

8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.

Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not to much noted.
Bacon.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryden.

9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.

I feel my genial spirits droop,
My hopes all flat, nature within me seems
In all her functions weary of herself. Milton.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.

How weary, stale, flat and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world! Shakespeare.

To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happinels, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unfavoury. Atterbury's Sermons.

11. Peremptory; absolute; downright.

His horse with flat tiring taught him, that discreet stays make speedy journeys. Sidney.

It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spenser.

As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all licen-tiousness. Spenser.

You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes;
Those prisoners you shall keep:

—I will, that's flat. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Fratily gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts, shuts that out of his story,
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his meer clod of earth, the spacious sky.
Herbert.

You had broke and robb'd his house,
And stole his talismanique louse;
And all his new-found old inventions,
With flat felonious intentions. Hudibras.

12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon.

The upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate
it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp. Ray.

FLAT. n. f.

1. A level; an extended plane.

The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon.

Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear.
Wotton's Architecture.

He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Addison.

2. Even ground; not mountainous.

Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
'Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'er-top old Pelion, or the skyish head

5 F 2

The

- The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fast by a mountain. Milton's Paradise Lost.
3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.
The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head, O'erbears your officers. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
All the infections, that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shakespeare.
Half my pow'rs this night,
Passing these flats, are taken by the tide;
These Lincoln washes have devoured them. Shakespeare.
4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.
I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shakespeare.
The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Raleigh's Essays.
Having newly left these grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton.
Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dang'rous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides skim o'er the cover'd land,
And seamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryden.
Must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.
5. The broad side of a blade.
A darted mandate came
From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the dæmons of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind. Dryden.
6. Depression of thought or language.
Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden.
7. A surface without relief, or prominences.
Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills? Bentley.
- To FLAT. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.
The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the tides, and bind them close, and let them in the ground, they will come up in one stock. Bacon.
With horrid shapes she does her sons expose,
Distends their swelling lips, and flats their nose. Creech.
2. To make vapid.
An orange, lemon and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four feet deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flatted. Bacon's Natural History.
- To FLAT. v. n.
1. To grow flat: opposed to swell.
I burnt it the second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Temple.
2. To render unanimated or evanid.
Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.
- FLATLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downwards; not edgewise.
What a blow was there given?
—An it had fallen flatlong. Shakespeare. Tempest.
- FLATLY. adv. [from flat.]
1. Horizontally; without inclination.

2. Without prominence or elevation.
3. Without spirit; dully; frigidly.
4. Peremptorily; downright.
He in these wars had flatly refused his aid. Sidney.
Thereupon they flatly disavouch
To yield him more obedience, or support. Daniel.
Unjust, thou say'st,
Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free. Milton.
Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, seclude him from directing the world. Bentley.
- FLATNESS. n. f. [from flat.]
1. Evenness; level extension.
2. Want of relief or prominence.
It appears so very plain and uniform, that one would think the coiner looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Addison on Medals.
3. Deadness; insipidity; vapidness.
Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel. Mortimer's Husbandry.
4. Dejection of fortune.
The emperor of Russia was my father:
Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery! Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.
5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.
How fast does obscurity, flatness, and impertinency flow in upon our meditations? 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.
6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.
Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fustian, and others sunk into flatness. Pope.
7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.
Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pail of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat; even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon.
- To FLATTEN. v. a. [flatir, French; from flat.]
1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.
2. To beat down to the ground.
If they should lie in it, and beat it down, or flatten it, it will rise again. Mortimer's Husbandry.
3. To make vapid.
4. To deject; to depress; to dispirit.
- To FLATTEN. v. n.
1. To grow even or level.
2. To grow dull and insipid.
Here joys that endure for ever, fresh and in vigour, are opposed to satisfactions that are attended with satiety and surfeits, and flatten in the very tasting. L'Estrange.
- FLATTER. n. f. [from flat.] The workman or instrument by which bodies are flattened.
- To FLATTER. v. a. [flatter, French.]
1. To sooth with praises; to please with blandishments; to gratify with servile obsequiousness; to gain by false compliments.
When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered. Shakespeare.
His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for's power to thunder: his heart's his mouth;
What his breast forges that his tongue must vent. Shakespeare.
He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet. Prov. xxix. 5.
He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Pf. xxxvi. 2.
After this way of flattering their willing bene-

- factors out of part, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piety.
- Averse alike to flatter or offend.
I scorn to flatter you or any man. Pope.
2. To praise falsely.
Flatter'd crimes of a licentious age,
Provoke our censure. Young.
3. To please; to sooth. This sense is purely Gallick.
A consort of voices supporting themselves by their different parts makes a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flatters them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
4. To raise false hopes.
He, always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flat'ring gales Unmindful. Milton.
- FLATTERER. n. f. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falstices.
When I tell him he is a flatterer,
He says he does; being then most flattered. Shakespeare.
Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: if he be a cunning flatterer, he will follow the arch flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to perforce. Bacon.
If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend. Dryden.
After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants. Addison's Guardian.
The publick should know this: yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer. Swift.
- FLATTERY. n. f. [from flatter; flatterie, French.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.
Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness,
And hold it mean to borrow aught from flattery. Rew.
Simple pride for flatt'ry makes demands. Pope.
See how they beg an alms of flattery!
They languish, O! support them with a lye. Young.
- FLATTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.
These are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape. Woodward on Fossils.
- FLATULENCY. n. f. [from flatulent.]
1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turgescence by wind confined.
Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency. Arbutnot.
2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.
Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions. Glanville.
- FLATULENT. adj. [flatulentus, flatus, Lat.]
1. Turgid with air; windy.
Pease are mild and demulcent; but being full of aerial particles are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion. Arbutnot.
Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again. Quincy.
2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.
To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our grosser faculties, is a flatulent vanity. Glanville's Sceptis.
How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works. Dryden.
- FLATUOSITY.

FLATUOSITY. n. f. [flatuosité, French; from flatus, Latin.] Windiness; fulness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all purgers have in them a raw spirit of wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly. Bacon.

FLATUOUS. adj. [from flatus, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor louthsome; and so leudeth it to the melancholy veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine. Bacon.

FLATUS. n. f. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore discussed by warm aromatics. Quincy.

FLATWISE, adj. [flat and wise: so it should be written, not flatways.] With the flat downwards; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the face of the stratum in which it was reposed. Woodward on Fossils.

To FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering shew in apparel.

With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough fain to immolate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,
For useless ornament and flaunting show:
We take on trust, in purple robes to shine,
And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine. Dryden.

You for, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-guilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family. Arbutnot.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper: the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places.

Fortune in men has some small difference made;
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade. Pope.

FLAUNT. n. f. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble, Wildly bound up, what would he say! or how Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold
The sternness of his presence! Shakespeare.

FLA'VOUR. n. f.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early. Addison's Spect.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,
With bending heaps, so nigh their bloom disclose,
Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows. Dryden.

FLA'VOROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degen'rate there, and fruits declin'd
From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind. Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. f. [flaw to break; flah, Saxon, a garment.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws
Or ere I weep. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Wool, new-shorn, being laid casually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw and had not the bung-hole open. Bacon's Natural History.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole or flaw. Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found:
'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound. Dryden.

As if great Atlas, from his height,
Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;
And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,

Should gape immense, and rushing down, o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail China-jar receive a flaw. Pope.

He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach or flaw, and supply it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin. Swift.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scriveners and brokers do value unsound men so serve their own turn. Bacon's Essays.

Traditions were a proof alone,
Could we be certain such they were, so known:
But since some flaws in long descents may be,
They make not truth, but probability. Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,
To null her jointure with a flaw. Hudibras.

Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires. Addison's Spectator.
So many flaws had this vow in its first conception. Atterbury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flō, Latin.] Obsolete.

Being incens'd, he's flint;
As humorous as Winter, and as sudden
As flaws congealed the spring of day. Shak. Hen. IV.
Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall, t'expel the Winter's flaw. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

As a huge fish, laid
Near to the cold weed-gathering shore, is with a north flaw fraid, Shoots back; so, sent against the ground,
Was foil'd Eurialus. Chapman's Illad.

Buriting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy-gust, and flaw,
Boreas, and Cæcias, and Argætes loud,
And Thræcias rend the woods, and seas upturn. Milton.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but myself
Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,
Are to the main inconsiderable. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw. Shakespeare.

The tort's revolted to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town
Came pouring in, I heard the mighty flaw;
When first it broke, the crowding ensigns saw
Which choak'd the passage. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would become A woman's story at a Winter's fire. Shaks. Macbeth.

To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure,

But his flaw'd heart,
Alack, too weak the conflict to support,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief, Burst smilingly. Shakespeare's King Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup. Boyle.

The brazen cauldrons with the frosts are flaw'd,
The garment stiff with ice, at hearths is thaw'd. Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

France hath flaw'd the league, and hath attach'd
Our merchant's goods. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

2. Not rigid; not inexorable; complying; obsequious.

Phocion was a man of great severity, and no way flexible to the will of the people. Bacon.

3. Ductile; manageable.

Under whose care forever a child is put to be taught, during the tender and flexible years of his life, it should be one who thinks Latin and language the least part of education. Locke.

4. That may be accommodated to various forms and purposes.

This was a principle more flexible to their purpose. Rogers.

FLEXIBILITY. n. f. [from flexible.]

1. Possibility to be bent; not brittleness; easiness to be bent; not stiffness; pliancy.

I will rather choose to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embated flexibilities shall be forced to bend. King Charles.

Keep those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out, which otherwise, by reason of their flexibilities and weight, would flag or curl. Boyle.

2. Facility; obsequiousness; compliance.

3. Ductility; manageableness.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable. Locke.

FLEXILE. adj. [flexilis, Latin.] Pliant; easily bent; obsequious to any power or impulse.

Every flexible wave

Obeys the blast, th' aerial tumult swells. Thomson.

FLEXION. n. f. [flexio, Latin.]

1. The act of bending.

2. A double; a bending; part bent; joint.

Of a sinuous pipe that may have some four flexions, trial would be made. Bacon's Natural History.

3. A turn towards any part or quarter.

Pity causeth sometimes tears, and a flexion or cast of the eye aside. Bacon's Natural History.

FLEXOR. n. f. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.

Flatterers who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back. Arbutnot.

FLEXUOUS. adj. [flexuosus, Latin.]

1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.

In regard to the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow canies, and the restrained flexuous rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible. Digby.

2. Bending; not straight; variable; not steady.

The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we did not feel; and the flexuous burning of flames doth shew the air beginneth to be unquiet. Bacon's Natural History.

FLEXURE. n. f. [flexura, Latin.]

1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.

Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward. Ray.

2. The act of bending.

The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy; His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shakspeare.

3. The part bent; the joint.

His mighty strength lies in his able loins, And where the flexure of his navel joins. Sandys.

4. Obsequious or servile cringe. Not used.

Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out With titles blown from adulation? Will give place to flexure and low bends? Sh. Hen. V.

TO FLICKER. v. a. [fligheren, Dutch;

plieceruan, Saxon.] To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.

The wreath of radiant fire,
On flickering Phoebus' front. Shakspeare. King Lear.

'Twas ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phosphor, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flick'ring on her nest made short essays to sing. Dryden.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;
Then flickering to his pallid lips she strove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.

FLICKER. n. f. [from fly.]

1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a run-away.

The gates are open, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.
Now the fliers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest; as in a jack.

The flier, tho't had leaden feet,
Turn'd so quick, you scarce could see't. Swift.

FLIGHT. n. f. [from to fly.]

1. The act of flying or running from danger.

And now, too late, he wishes for the flight,
That strength he wasted in ignoble flight. Denham.
He thinks by flight his mistress must be won,
And claims the prize because he best did run. Dryden.

As eager of the chase, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan saw and lov'd, and burning with desire,

2. The act of using wings; volation.

For he so swift, so nimble was of flight,
That from his lower tract he dar'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser.

The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Latian palace took her flight. Dryden. Aen.
Winds that tempests brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, lose their spite. Dryden.

3. Removed from place to place by means of wings.

Ere the bat hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shakspeare. Macbeth.
The fowls shall take their flight away together. 2 Esdr. v. 6.

Fowls, by winter forc'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands. Dryden.

4. A flock of birds flying together.

Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shakspeare.
They take great pride in the feathers of birds, and this they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited into it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon.

I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, on my cup t' attend. Milton.

5. The birds produced in the same season: as, the harvest flight of pigeons.

6. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.

At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full threescore Scots they flew. Chevy Chase.
Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Swift.

7. The space past by flying.

8. Heat of imagination; rally of the soul.

Old Fingar's flights by him are reacht,
When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.

He shewed all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was because he attempted every thing. Pope.

Strange graces still, and stranger flights she had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.

Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fail. Pope.

9. Excursion on the wing.

If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interests of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.

It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to deride these things. Tillotson.

10. The power of flying.

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way. Shakspeare.

FLIGHTLY. adj. [from flight.]

1. Fleeting; swift.

Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it. Shakspeare. Macbeth.

2. Wild; full of imagination.

FLIMSY. adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers.]

1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.

2. Mean; spiritless; without force.

Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope.

TO FLINCH. v. n. [corrupted from fling, Skinner.]

1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.

Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other; nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South's Sermon.

A child, by a constant course of unkindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.

Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

2. In Shakspeare it signifies to fail.

If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpunied let me die. Shakspeare.

FLINCHER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who shrinks or fails in any matter.

TO FLING. preter. flung; part. flung or flong. v. a. [from fligo, Latin, Skinner: according to others from flying; so to fling is to set flying.]

1. To cast from the hand; to throw.

The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs Upon him. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
'Tis fate that flings the dice; and as she flings
Of kings makes peasants, and of peasants kings. Dryden.

2. To dart; to cast with violence.

How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung. Denham.

3. To scatter.

Ev'ry beam new transient colours flings,
Colours that change where'er they wave their wings. Pope.

4. To drive by violence.

A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnet's Theory.

5. To move forcibly.

The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small a compass, order'd all his apartments to be flung open. Addison's Spectator.

6. To cast: in an ill sense.

I know thy gen'rous temper:

Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It straight takes fire.

Addison's Cato.

7. To force into another condition, probably into a worse.

Squalid fortune, into baseness flung,

Doth from the pride of wonted ornaments.

Spenser.

8. To FLING away. To eject; to dismiss.

Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;

By that sin sell the angels.

Shakespeare.

9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.

These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing.

Woodward.

10. To FLING off. To haffle in the chace; to defeat of a prey.

These men are too well acquainted with the chace to be flung off by any false steps or doubles.

Addison's Spectator.

To FLING. v. n.

1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.

The angry beast

Began to kick, and fling, and wince,

As if he had been beside his sense.

Hudibras.

Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them wince and fling as if they had some mettle.

Tillotson.

2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.

Duncan's horses,

Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience.

Shakespeare.

FLING. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A throw; a cast.

2. A gibe; a sneer, a contemptuous remark.

No little scribbler is of wit so bare,

But has his fling at the poor wedded pair.

Addison.

I, who love to have a fling

Both at senate-house and king,

Thought no method more commodious

Than to shew their vices odious.

Swift.

FLINGER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. He who throws.

2. He who jeers.

FLINT. n. f. [flint, Saxon.]

1. A semi-pellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish grey, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough: its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glass-making.

Hill on Fossils.

Searching the window for a flint, I found

This paper.

Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred;

A flint will break upon a featherbed.

Cleaveland.

There's is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as it it were kindled by a beam from the sun.

South's Sermons.

Take this, and lay your flint edg'd weapon by.

Dryden.

I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighb'ring wood,
And stinke the sparkling flint, and dress the food.

Prior.

2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.

Your tears, a heart of flint

Might tender make.

Spenser.

Throw my heart

Against the flint and hardness of my fault.

Shak.

The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps, is no good husbandry.

Bacon's Natural History.

3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; inexorable.

Gratitude,

Through flinty Tartar's bosom, would peep forth,

And answer thanks.

Shakespeare.

FLIPP. n. f. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in ships, made by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.

The tarpawlin and twabber is lolling at Madagascar, with some drunken sunburnt whore, over a can of flip.

Dennis.

FLIPPANT. adj. [A word of no great authority, probably derived from flip-flap.]

1. Nimble; moveable. It is used only of the act of speech.

An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble or flippant.

Addison.

2. Pert; petulant; waggish.

Away with flippant epilogues.

Thomson.

FLIPPANTLY. adv. [from the adjective.]

In a flowing prating way.

none of his skains mates.

Shakespeare.

Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world.

Addison.

FLIRTATION. n. f. [from flirt.] A quick sprightly motion. A cant word among women.

A muslin flounce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air.

Pope.

To FLIT. v. n. [from To fleet; or from flitter, Danish, to remove.]

1. To fly away.

Likest it seemeth, in my simple wit,

Unto the fair sunshine in Summer's day,

That when a dreadful storm away is flit,

Through the broad world doth spread his goodly ray.

Spenser.

2. To remove; to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarterday, or the usual term.

His prudging ghost did strive

With the frail flesh; at last it flitted is,

Whither the souls do die of men that live amiss.

Fairy Queen.

So hardly he the flitted life does win,

Unto her native prison to return.

Fairy Queen.

It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out of one body into some other.

Hooker.

3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.

He made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;

Yet miss'd so narrow, that he cut the cord

Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird.

Dryden's Aen.

Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!

Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air.

Pope.

4. To be flux or unfixable.

Himself uphigh he lifted from the ground,

And with strong flight did forcibly divide

The yielding air, which nigh too feeble found

Her flitting parts, and element unsound.

Fairy Queen.

He stop'd at once the passage of his wind,

And the free soul to flitting air resign'd.

Dryden.

FLIT. adj. [from fleet.] Swift; nimble; quick. Not in use.

And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,

And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were dight,
In poison and in blood, of malice and desight.

Fairy Queen.

FLITCH. n. f. [flisce, Saxon; flycke, Danish; fleche, fleche, French, Skinner.]

The side of a hog salted and cured.

But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,

On birthdays, festivals, or days of state,

A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;

If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare.

Dryden's Juv.

While he from out the chimney took

A flitch of bacon off the hook,

Cut out large slices to be fry'd.

Swift.

He sometimes accompanies the present with a flitch of bacon.

The vast parterres a thousand hands shall make:
Lo! Cobham comes, and floats them with a lake.

Pope.

Float. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of flowing; the flux; the contrary to the ebb. A sense now out of use.

Our trust in the Almighty is, that with us contentions are now at their highest float.

Hooker.

There is some disposition of bodies to rotation, particularly from East to West; of which kind we conceive the main float and refloat of the sea is, which is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Any body so contrived or formed as to swim upon the water.

They took it for a ship, and, as it came nearer,
for a boat; but it proved a float of weeds and rushes.

L'Estrange.

A passage for the weary people make;
With oser floats the standing water strow,
Of massy stones make bridges, if it flow.

Dryden.

5. To adorn with embellishments of language; to grace with eloquence ostentatiously diffusive.

The labours of Hercules, though flourish'd with much fabulous matter; yet notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating giants, monsters, and tyrants. Bacon.

As they are likely to over-flourish their own case,

so their flattery is hardest to be discovered. Cullier.

6. To adorn; to embellish; to grace.

To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin,

Sith the justice of your title to him

Doth flourish the deceit. Shakespeare.

FLOURISH, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Bravery; beauty; ambitious splendour.

I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,

The presentation of but what I was. Shakesp.

The flourish of his sober youth,

Was the pride of naked truth. Craslow.

2. An ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance.

This is a flourish: there follow excellent parables. Bacon.

We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature. Brown.

The apprehension is so deeply riveted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen or brush it out. More.

Villainies have not the same countenance, when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishes of wit and rhetoric interposed between the light and the object. L'Estrange.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, though least believed by them. South's Sermons.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he flurs his crimes;

He lards with flourishes his long harangue;

'Tis fine, say'st thou; what, to be prais'd and hang?

Dryd.

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.

A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the near characters and flourishes of a bible curiously printed. Boyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishes about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye. More against Atheism.

FLO'URISHER, n. f. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may,

or in his flow'r;

For not our greatest flourisher can equal him in pow'r. Chapman.

To FLOUT, v. a. [fluyten, Dutch; flouwe, Frisick.] To mock; to insult; to treat with mockery and contempt.

You must flout my insufficiency. Shakespeare.

The Norweyan banners flout the sky.

And fan our people cold. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

to write to one she knew would flout her. Shak.

Phyllida flouts me. Walton's Angler.

To FLOUT, v. n. To practise mockery; to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument? Shakespeare.

With talents well endu'd

To be scurrilous and rude;

When you pertly raise your snout,

Flee and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

FLOUT, n. f. [from the verb.] A mock; an insult; a word or act of contempt.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table,

Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

She opened it, and read it out,

With many a smile and leering flout. Hudibras.

Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flout;

Snarl, if you please; but you shall snarl without. Dryden.

How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an intemperate cup? Calamy's Sermons.

FLO'UTER, n. f. [from flout.] One who jeers.

To FLOW, v. n. [flopan, Saxon.]

Morimer's Husbandry.

FLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb.

Some, from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flow and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ebb of tides, and their mysterious flow,

We as arts elements shall understand.

Dryden.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.

The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood.

Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better.

South.

FLOWER. n. f. [fleur, French; flor, flores, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have a petala, a flamen, apex and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller, and which usually have but one single stile; and compounded, which consist of many flosculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are monopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one entire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petals, or leaves; as in borage, buglos: or polypetalous, which have distinct petals, and those falling off singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petals of monopetalous flowers always do: but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike; but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage and deadnettle. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the aristochia; 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamacissus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet, or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galeate, cucullate, and gale-riculate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carniculum, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are, first, discous, or discoidal; that is, whose flosculi are set so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petala standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamamelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanacetum: 2d, planifolius, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia. 3d, Pistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petala, are called stamineous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the juli, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cat-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel.

Miller.

Good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their caps,

Dying ere they sicken. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

With flow'r interwoven tresses torn,

The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn.

Milton.

Beauteous flow'rs why do we spread
Upon the monuments of the dead.

Cowley.

Though the same sun with all diffusive rays

Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,

We praise the stronger effort of his power,

And always set the gem above the flower.

Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations.

Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

The nomination of persons to those places being so prime and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself.

Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:

In flow'r of age you perish for a song.

Pope.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal.

The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want.

Spenser.

I can make my audit up, that all

From me back receive the flow'r of all,

And leave me but the bran.

Shakespeare.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd,

Next these in worth, and firm those urns be seal'd;

Be twice ten measures of the choicest flour.

Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour.

Pope's Odyssey.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the Palms do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form.

Adison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb.

Shakespeare.

FLOWER de Luce. n. f. A bulbous iris.

Miller specifies thirty-four species of this plant; and among them the Persian flower de luce is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flower, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crop'd are the flower de luce in your arms;
Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shaksp.

The iris is the flower de luce. Peacham.

To FLOWER. v. n. [fleurir, French; or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly fort,

To take the solace of the open air,

And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport.

Fairy Queen.

Sacred hill, whose head full high,

Is, as it were, for endless memory

Of that dear Lord, who oft thereon was found,

For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd.

Fairy Queen.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd,

Op'ning their various colours.

Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load.

Dryd. George.

To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,

And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed.

Pope.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring.

Like swallow swift, I wandered here and there;

For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,

That I of doubted danger had no fear.

Spenser.

This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,

Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine.

Shaksp. Henry VI.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above the water were best, and that beer did flower a little; whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh.

Bacon.

An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits so smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering.

Bacon's Natural History.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations, which have flowered off, and are, as it were, the burning of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of.

Milton.

FLOWERAGE. n. f. [from flower.] Store of flowers.

Di. 7.

FLOWERET. n. f. [fleuret, French.] A flower; a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would aguish

With gaudy garlands, or fresh flow'rets dight,

About her neck, or rings of rushes plight.

F. Q.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds

Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,

Stood now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,

Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail.

Shakespeare.

So to the sylvan lodge

They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,

With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells.

Milt.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets crown'd,

And lavishly perfumes the fields around;

But no substantial nourishment receives,

Infirm the stalks, unsolid are the leaves.

Dryd.

FLOWERGARDEN, n. f. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in my flower garden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLOWERINESS. n. f. [from flowery.]

1. The state of abounding in flowers.

2. Floridness of speech.

FLOWERINGBUSH. n. f. A plant.

FLOWERY. adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

My mother Circe, with the syrens three,

Amidst the flow'ry kirtled Naiades.

Milton.

Day's

FLU

Day's harbinger
Comes dancing from the East, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws
The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton.
O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw. Pope.

To her the shady grove, the flow'ry field,
The streams and fountains no delight could yield. Pope.

FLO'WINGLY. adv. [from flow.] With volubility; with abundance.

FLOWE. n. f. [flake, Scott.] A flounder;
the name of a fish.

Amongst these the flowk, sole, and plaice, follow
the tide up into the fresh waters. Carew.

FLOW'EWORT. n. f. The name of a plant.
FLOWN, Participle of fly, or flee, they being confounded; properly of fly.

1. Gone away.

For those,
Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,
Flown to the upper world. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?
Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night
Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton.
Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from your deeds I rightly may divine,
Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope.

FLU'CTUANT. adj. [fluens, Latin.]
Wavering; uncertain.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluently wandering humour and opinion? L'Estrange.

To FLU'CTUATE. v. n. [fluere, Latin.]

1. To roll to and again, as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,
With all the curious meteors hovering there,
And the wide regions of the land, proclaim
The Pow'r Divine, that rais'd the mighty frame. Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter

New parts puts on; and, as to passion mov'd, Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has hitherto been of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison.

5. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.

FLUCTUATION. n. f. [fluctuatio, Latin;
fluctuation, French; from fluere.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.

Fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interjacency irregulars. Brown.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.

It will not hinder it from making a proselyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error. Boyle.

FLUE. n. f. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from flow of fly.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.

2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLU

FLUE'LLIN. n. f. The herb SPEEDWELL.

FLU'ENCY. n. f. [from fluent.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.

Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Garth.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.

Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.

We reason with such fluency and fire,
The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire. Tickel.

The common fluency of speech in many men,
and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both.
Swift.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease,
Behold him tost on seas. Sandys.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave. Sandys.

FLU'ENT. adj. [fluens, Latin.]

1. Liquid.

It is not malleable; but yet it is not fluent, but stupefied. Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.

Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must do so the next. Ray on the Creation.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.

Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.

I shall lay before you all that's within me,
And with most fluent utterance. Denham's Sophy.

FLUENT. n. f. Stream; running water.

Confiding in their hands, that fed'rous strive
To cut th' outrageous fluent; in this distress, Ev'n in the sight of death. Philips.

FLU'ENTLY. adv. [from fluent.] With ready flow; volubly; readily; without obstruction or difficulty.

FLU'ID. adj. [fluidus, Latin; fluide, French.] Having parts easily separable;
not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Left it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milton.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton.

FLU'ID. n. f.

1. Any thing not solid.

2. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids. Arbutnot.

FLU'IDITY. n. f. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much, by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey;
and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton.

A disease opposite to this spissitude is too great fluidity. Arbutnot.

FLU'IDNESS. n. f. [from fluid.] That quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should say that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture, the

FLU

some parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLU'MMERY. n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Locke.

FLUNG. participle and preterite of fling.
Thrown; cast.

Several statues the Romans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves.

Addison on Italy.

FLU'OR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A fluid state.

The particles of fluids, which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a fluor, are most easily separated and rarefied into vapours. Newton's Opt.

2. Catamenia.

FLU'RRY. n. f.

1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast.

The boat was overset by a sudden flurry from the north. Swift.

2. Hurry; a violent commotion.

To FLUSH. v. n. [fluyzen, Dutch, to flow; flus, or flux, French.]

1. To flow with violence.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flus up and run over the vessel. Ray.

It fluseth violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To come in haste.

If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
As I make 'em to flus,
Each owl out of his bush. Ben Jonson's Owls.

3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood. It is properly used of a sudden or transient heat of countenance; not of a settled complexion.

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flusbing in her gauled eyes,
She married. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thus Eve with count'nance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek distemper flusbing glow'd. Milton.

What can be more significant than the sudden flusbing and confusion of a blush? Collier.

What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood, which flusbes guilty in your face? Dryden.

At once, array'd

In all the colours of the flusbing year,
The garden glows. Thomson's Spring.

4. To shine suddenly; obsolete.

A flake of fire that flusbing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.

To FLUSH. v. a.

1. To colour; to redden: properly to redden suddenly.

The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flus'd with more exalted charms. Addison's Cato.

Some court, or secret corner seek,
Nor flus with shame the passing virgin's cheek. Gay's Trivia.

2. To elate; to elevate; to give the appearance of sudden joy.

As prosperous people, flus'd with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence. Atterbury's Sermons.

FLUSH. adj.

1. Fresh; full of vigour.

He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flus'd as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save Heaven? Shakespeare.

I love

FLU

- I love to wear cloths that are flush,
Not prefacing old rags with plush. Cleveland.
2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.
Lord Strut was not very flush in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail. Arbutnot.
- FLUSH. n. f.
1. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow.
This is commonly corrupted to flask: as,
a flask of water.
Never had any man such a loss, cries a widower,
in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife.
L'Estrange.
The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Ray.
Success may give him a present flush of joy; but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring.
Rogers's Sermons.
2. Cards all of a sort.
To FLU'STER. v. a. [from To flush.] To make hot and rosy with drinking; to make half drunk.
Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night flusher'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Shakespeare. Othello.
- FLUTE. n. f. [flute, flute, French; flayte, Dutch.]
1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.
Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke. Shak.
The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute.
Dryden.
2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.
To FLUTE. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.
- To FLUTTER. v. n. [ploten, Saxon, flotter, French.]
1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.
As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him. Deut.
Think you've an angel by the wings;
One that gladly will be nigh,
To wait upon each morning-sigh;
To flutter in the balmy air
Of your well-perfumed pray'r. Crashaw.
They fed, and flutt'ring, by degrees withdrew.
Dryden.
2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.
Excess muddles the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew.
No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,
That once so flutter'd, and that once so writ.
Pope's Dunci.
3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.
Ye spirits! to your charge repair;
The flutt'ring fan be Zephyretta's care. Pope.
They the tall mast above the vessel rear,
Or teach the flutt'ring sail to float in air.
Pope's Odyssey.
4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly; to be in a state of uncertainty.
The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and how long we fluttered upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surpris'd.
Howel's Vocal Forest.
It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or discernment of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in sounds of doubtful signification. Locke.

FLU

- Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance, Produc'd by atoms from their flutt'ring dance! Prior.
- His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively. Watts.
- To FLUTTER. v. a.
1. To drive in disorder; like a flock of birds suddenly roused.
Like an eagle in a dovecoat, I flutt'rd your Volscians in Corioli. Shakespeare.
2. To hurry the mind.
3. To disorder the position of any thing.
- FLUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Vibration; undulation; quick and irregular motion.
An infinite variety of motions are to be made use of in the flutter of a fan: there is the angry flutter, the modest flutter, and the timorous flutter.
Addison's Spectator.
2. Hurry; tumult; disorder of mind.
3. Confusion; irregular position.
- FLUVIA'TICK. adj. [fluvaticus, Latin.] Belonging to rivers.
- FLUX. n. f. [fluxus, Latin; flux, French.]
1. The act of flowing; passage.
The simple and primary motion of fire is flux, in a direct line from the centre of the fuel to its circumference. Digby.
By the perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body. Arbutnot.
2. The state of passing away and giving place to others.
Whether the heat of the sun in animals whose parts are successive, and in a continual flux, can produce a deep and perfect gloss of blackness.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
What the stated rate of interest should be, in the constant change of affairs, and flux of money, is hard to determine. Locke.
In the constituent matter of one body, turning naturally to another like body, the stock or fund can never be exhausted, nor the flux and alteration sensible. Woodward.
Languages, like our bodies, are in a perpetual flux, and stand in need of recruits to supply those words that are continually falling. Felton.
3. Any flow or issue of matter.
Quinces stop fluxes of blood. Arbutnot.
4. Dysentery; disease in which the bowels are excoriated and bleed; bloody flux.
Eat eastern spice, secure
From burning fluxes and hot calenture. Hallifax.
5. Excrement; that which falls from bodies.
Civet is the very uncleanly flux of a cat. Shak.
6. Concourse; confluence.
Lest and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Shakespeare. As you like it.
7. The state of being melted.
8. That which mingled with the body makes it melt.
- FLUX. adj. [fluxus, Latin.] Unconstant; not durable; maintained by a constant succession of parts.
- To FLUX. v. a.
1. To melt.
2. To salivate; to evacuate by spitting.
He might fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or fluxed into another world. South.
- FLUXILITY. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.] Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.
Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversion of nature to vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least fluxility of the bodies here below. Boyle.
- FLUXION. n. f. [fluxio, Latin.]
1. The act of flowing.
2. The matter that flows.

FLY

- The fluxion increased, and abscesses were raised.
Wifeman.
3. [In mathematics.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small or infinitely small quantity, which, being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given. Harris.
A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life. Watts.
- To FLY. pret. flew or fled; part. fled or flown. v. n. [pleogan, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flew and flown. To flee is to escape, or to go away, plean, Saxon, and makes fled.
They are now confounded.]
1. To move through the air with wings.
Ere the bat hath flown
His cloister'd flight. Shakespeare. Macbeth.
Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heaven. Gen. i. 20.
These men's hastiness the warier sort of you do not commend: ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown.
Hooker.
2. To pass through the air.
Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward.
Job, v.
3. To pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape.
Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,
Help thee to pass the tedious time,
Which else would on thy hand remain;
Though flown, it ne'er looks back again. Prior.
4. To pass swiftly.
The scouts with flying speed
Return, and through the city spread the news.
Dryden.
Earth rolls back beneath the flying steed. Pope.
5. To move with rapidity.
As striplings whip the top for sport,
On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
The wooden engine flies and whirls about. Dryden.
6. To part with violence.
Glad to catch this good occasion,
Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff
And corn shall fly asunder. Shakespeare.
He bassas heads to save his own, made fly;
And now, the sultan to preserve, must die. Waller.
7. To break; to shiver; to burst asunder with a sudden explosion.
Behold, a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, off your bottle flies. Swift.
8. [plean, Saxon; fliehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. [In this sense the verb is properly to flee, when fled is formed; but the following examples shew that they are confounded:
they are confounded oftener in the present than in the preter tense.]
Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,
As lion fierce, upon the flying prey. Spenser.
Ye shall see, as ye fled from before the earthquake. Zech. xiv. 5.
Abiathar escaped and fled after David. 1 Sa. xxii.
What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,
Reviv'd the drooping arts again;
If science rais'd her head,
And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled.
Dryden.
He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,
And live in shades with her and love alone. Prior.
I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry plains;
From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,
Forsoke mankind, and all the world but love. Pope.
9. To FLY at. To spring with violence upon; to fall on suddenly.
A servant

FLY

A servant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act, bending his sword
To his great master; who, hereat enrag'd, Flew on him, and amongst them fell'd him dead.
Shakefp.

Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth and fly at him.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat. South.
This is an age that flies at all learning, and enquires especially into faults. South.

10. To FLY in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself.
Swift's Drapier's Letters.

11. To FLY in the face. To act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face:
—But how, if nature fly in my face first?
—Then nature's the aggressor. Dryden.

12. To FLY off. To revolt.

Deny to speak to me? They're sick, they're weary,
They have travelled all the night! mean fetches,
The images of revolt and flying off. Shakefp.
The traitor Syphax
Flew off at once with his Numidian horse.
Addison's Cato.

13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.

How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks.
Ben Jonf. Catil.
Passion is apt to ruffle, and pride will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier of Friendship.

14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.

You use me like a courser spurr'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dryden.
Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent. Dryden.

15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.

All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley's Sermons.

16. To let FLY. To discharge.

The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky. Granville.

17. To be light and unencumbered: as a flying camp.

To FLY. v. a.

1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.

Love like a shadow flies, when substance love
pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues.
Shakespeare.

O Jove, I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakefp.
If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need it.
Bacon's Essays.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle. Milton.

2. To refuse association with.

Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares oppress'd,
And his toils'd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden's Juvenal.
Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryden.

3. To quit by flight.

Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who sail'd in air. Dryden's Æn.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.

If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravaging fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.

5. It is probable that flew was originally the preterite of fly, when it signified vola-

FOA

tion, and fled when it signified escape:
flown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the Scriptures in which fly and flee are carefully kept separate.

FLY. n. s. [pleoge, Saxon.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakespeare.
My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn. Locke.
To prevent the fly, some propose to sow ashes with the seed. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To heedless flies the window proves
A constant death. Thomson's Summer.

2. That part of a machine which, being put into a quick motion, regulates and equalises the motion of the rest.

If we suppose a man tied in place of the weight, it were easy, by a single hair fastened unto the fly or balance of the jack, to draw him up from the ground.
Wilkins.

3. That part of a vane which points how the wind blows.

To FLY'BLOW. v. a. [fly and blow.] To taint with flies; to fill with maggots.

I am unwilling to believe that he designs to play tricks, and to flyblow my words, to make others dislike them. Stillingfleet.

Like a flyblown cake of tallow;
Or on parchment, ink turn'd yellow. Swift.

So morning insects, that in rauc begun,
Shine, buzz, and flyblow in the setting sun. Pope.

FLY'BOAT. n. s. [fly and boat.] A kind of vessel nimble and light for sailing.

FLYCA'TCHER. n. s. [fly and catch.] One that hunts flies.

There was more need of Brutus in Domitian's days, to mend, than of Horace, to laugh at a flycatcher. Dryden.

The swallow was a flycatcher as well as the spider. L'Estrange.

FLY'ER. n. s. [from fly.]

1. One that flies or runs away. This is written more frequently flier.

They hit one another with darts, as the others do with their hands, which they never throw counter, but at the back of the flier. Sandys's Journey.

He grieves so many Britons should be lost;
Taking more pains, when he beheld them yield,
To save the fliers than to win the field. Waller.

2. One that uses wings.

3. The fly of a Jack.

4. [In architecture.] Stairs made of an oblong square figure, whose fore and back sides are parallel to each other, and so are their ends: the second of these flyers stands parallel behind the first, the third behind the second, and so are said to fly off from one another.

To FLY'FISH. v. n. [fly and fish.] To angle with a hook baited with a fly, either natural or artificial.

I shall give you some directions for fly-fishing.
Watson.

FOAL. n. s. [fola, Saxon.] The offspring of a mare, or other beast of burthen. The custom now is to use colt for a young horse, and foal for a young mare; but there was not originally any such distinction.

Also flew his steed,
And with his winged heels did tread the wind.
As he had been a foal of Pegasus's kind. F. Q.
Twenty she-asses and ten foals. Gen. xxii. 15.

To FOAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth. Used of mares,

FOC

Give my horse to Timon: it foals me straight Ten able horses. Shakespeare's Timon.

Such colts as are
Of generous race, straight, when they first are foal'd, Walk proudly. May's Georgicks.

1. The act of beating into thin leaves.
2. Foliation is one of the parts of the flower, being the collection of those sugacious coloured leaves called petals, which constitute the compass of the flower; and sometimes guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples and pears, and sometimes stand within it, as in cherries and apricots; for these, being tender and pulpos, and coming forth in the Spring, would be injured by the weather, if they were not lodged up within their flowers. Quincy.

FO'LIATURE. n. f. [from folium, Latin.]
The state of being hammered into leaves.
Diët.
FO'LIO. n. f. [in folio, Latin.] A large book or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather sitting to his dolor dolorous discourses of their own and other folks misfortune. Sidney.

Dorilaus having married his sister, had his marriage in short time blest, for so are folk wont to say, how unhappy soever the children after grow, with a son. Sidney.
When with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talk'd like other folk;
For all a rhetorician's rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools. Hudibras.
2. Nations; mankind.
Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern
the nations upon earth. Psal. lvii. 4.
3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.
The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between?
And the old folk, time's doting chronicles,
Say it did so a little time before. Shakespeare.

cle*, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts. Brown.
2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying seed-vessels, capsula seminalis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pedicu-laris, &c. Quincy.
TO FO'LLOW. v. a. [folgan, Saxon;
wolgen, Dutch.]
1. To go after; not before, or side by side.
I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakespeare.
5 H Him

- Him and all his train
Follow'd in bright procession, to behold
Creation, and the wonders of his might. Milton.
What could I do,
But follow straight, invisibly thus led?
2. To pursue as an enemy; to chase.
Where ranks fell thickest was indeed the place
To seek Sebastian, through a track of death
I follow'd him by groans of dying foes. Dryden.
3. To accompany; not to forsake.
Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain
God is as here, and will be found alike
Present, and of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, till compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love, his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.
Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tun'd Angelic harmonies. Milton.
4. To attend as a dependant.
And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and follow'd Saul to the battle. 1 Sam. xvii. 13.
Let not the muse then flatter lawless sway,
Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.
5. To go after, as a teacher.
Not yielding over to old age his country delights,
he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney.
Some pious tears the pitying hero paid,
And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade.
Dryden's Æn.
We follow fate, which does too fast pursue. Dryden.
6. To succeed in order of time.
Such follow him as shall be register'd,
Part good, part bad, of bad the longer scroll. Milt.
Signs following signs, lead on the mighty year. Pope.
7. To be consequential in argument, as effects to causes.
I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold
And vant'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear
What yet they know must follow, to endure Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain. Milton.
8. To imitate; to copy, as a pupil; or to be of an opinion or party.
Where Rome keepeth that which is ancients and better, others, whom we much more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse, we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Hooker.
Ill patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke.
9. To obey; to observe, as a guide or direction.
If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no Christians.
Tillotson.
Most men admire
Virtue, who follow not her lore. Paradise Reg.
Fair virtue should I follow thee,
I should be naked and alone,
For thou art not in company,
And scarce art to be found in one. Evelyn.
10. To pursue as an object of desire.
Follow peace with all men. Hebrews.
Follow not that which is evil. John.
11. To confirm by new endeavours; to keep up indefatigably.
They bound themselves to his laws and obedience;
and in case it had been followed upon them, as it should have been, they should have been reduced to perpetual civility. Spenser.
12. To attend to; to be busied with.
He that undertaketh and followeth other men's business for gain, shall fall into suits. Ecclef.
- To FOLLOW. v. n.
1. To come after another.

Welcome to all that lead or follow
To the oracle of Apollo. Ben. Jonson.
2. To attend servilely.
Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion.

- That in the nature of their lords rebels:
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shak.
3. To be posterious in time.
4. To be consequential, as effect to cause.
If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness mislead him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.
To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.
5. To be consequential, as inference to premises.
Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.
Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow, from making all political power to be nothing else but Adam's paternal power. Locke.
6. To continue endeavours; to persevere.
Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord. Hos.
- FOLLOWER. n. s. [from follow.]
1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.
Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower;
but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shak.
No stop, no stay, but clouds of sand arise,
Spurn'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes.
Dryden.
2. One who observes a guide or leader.
The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. South's Sermon.
3. An attendant or dependant.
No follower but a friend. Pope.
4. An associate; a companion.
How accompanied, can't thou tell that?
—With Poins, and other his continual followers.
Shak. H. IV.
5. One under the command of another.
I hold it no wisdom to leave unto the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law.
Spenser's State of Ireland.
And forc'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,
To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden.
6. A scholar; an imitator; a copyer.
Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ.
1 Cor. xi. 1.
The true profession of Christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men.
Spratt's Sermons.
Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have.
Locke.
The church of Smyrna professed they worthily loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord; and because of their exceeding great affection to their king and their master. Nelson.
The studious head or gen'rous mind,
Follower of God, or friend of human kind,
Poet or patriot, rose but to restore
The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope.
7. One of the same faction or party.
- FOLLIE. n. s. [folle, French.]
1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.
This is folly childhood's guide.
This is childhood at her side. Hawkesworth.
2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.
Think't thou, that duty should have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakesp.
3. Act of negligence or passion unbecoming gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.
Love is blind, and lovers cannot see
The pretty follies that themselves commit.

- For if they could, Cupid himself would blush
To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakespeare.
Thy hum'rous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot. Prior.
Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. P. p.
- To FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin; fomenter, French.]
1. To cherish with heat.
Every kind that lives,
Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton.
2. To bathe with warm lotions.
He fomented the head with opiates to procure sleep, and a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbuthnot.
3. To encourage; to support; to cherish.
They love their givings, and foment their deeds no less than parents do their children. Warton.
Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,
Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires. Dryd.
They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Locke.
- FOMENTATION. n. s. [fomentation, French, from foment.]
1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot flannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and discuss obstructed humours.
Quincy.
Fomentation calleth forth the humour by vapours;
but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultis, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some ste-pefactive. Bacon's Natural History.
2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.
The medicines were prepared by the physicians,
and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses.
Arbuthnot.
- FOMENTER. n. s. [from foment.] One that foments; an encourager; a supporter.
These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politic at home, being like humours stirred in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up. Howel.
- FON. n. s. [Scott. A word now obsolete.]
A fool; an idiot.
Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,
That love's the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser.
- FOND. n. s. [fon, Scottish. A word of which I have found no satisfactory etymology. To fonne is in Chaucer to doat, to be foolish.]
1. Foolish; silly; indiscreet; imprudent; injudicious.
That the Grecians or Gentiles ever did think it a fond or unlikely way to seek men's conversion by sermons, we have not heard. Hooker.
He was beaten out of all love of learning by a fond school-master. Ajcham.
Tell these sad women.
'Tis fond to wail inevitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at them. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond. Shakesp. Timon.
I am weaker than a woman's tear,
Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance. Shakesp.
Fond thoughts may fall into some idle brain;
But one belief of all, is ever wise. Darvies.
Thou see'st
How subtly to detain thee I devise,
Inviting thee to hear while I relate;
Fond! were it not in hope of thy reply. Milton.
So fond are mortal men.
Fall'n into wrath divine,
As their own ruin on themselves t' invite. Milton.
'Twas not revenge for griev'd Apollo's wrong
Those ass's ears on Midas' temples hung;
But fond repentance of his happy with. Waller.
But reason with your fond religion fights;
For many gods are many infinities. Dryden.
This

This is fond, because it is the way to cheat thyself.
Tillotson.

2. Trifling; valued by folly.
Not with fond shackle, of the tested gold,
Or stones, whose rate are either rich or poor
As fancy values them. Shak. Meas. for Meas.
3. Foolishly tender; injudiciously indulgent.
I'm a foolish fond wife.
Like Venus I'll shine
Be fond and be fine. Addison.

4. Pleased in too great a degree; foolishly delighted: with of.
Fame is in itself a real good, if we may believe Cicero, who was perhaps too fond of it. Dryden.
I, fond of my well-chosen seat,
My pictures, medals, books complete. Prior.
Some are so fond to know a great deal at once, and love to talk of things with freedom and boldness before they thoroughly understand them. Watts.

TO FOND. v. a. [from the noun.] To
TO FONDLE v. a. treat with great indulgence; to caress; to coddle.
Howe'er unjust your jealousy appear,
It does my pity, not my anger move:
I'll fond it as the froward child of love. Dryden.
When midst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fonds thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse the venom in her veins. Dryden.
They are allowed to kiss the child at meeting and parting; but a professor, who always stands by, will not suffer them to use any fondling expressions. Swift.

TO FOND. v. n. To be fond of; to be in love with; to dote on.

How will this sadge? My master loves her dearly;
And I, poor monster, fond as much on him;
And she, mistaken, seems to dote on me. Shaksp.

FONDLER. n. s. [from fond.] One who fondles.

FONDLING. n. s. [from fandle.] A person or thing much fondled or caressed; something regarded with great affection.

Partiality in a parent is commonly unlucky; for fondlings are in danger to be made fools, and the children that are least cockered make the best and wisest men. L'Estrange.

The bent of our own minds may favour any opinion or action, that may shew it to be a fondling of our own. Locke.

Any body would have guessed mis to have been bred up under a cruel stepdame, and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbutnot's John Bull.
Bred a fondling and an heiress,
Dress'd like any lady may relate
Cooker'd by the servants round,
Was too good to touch the ground. Swift.

FONDLY. adv. [from fond.]

1. Foolishly; weakly; imprudently; injudiciously.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence. Shak.
Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantick man. Shak.
Ficus fondly adviseth, for the prolongation of life, that a vein be opened in the arm of some wholesome young man, and the blood be sucked. Bacon.

The military mound
The British files transcend, in evil hour
For their proud foes, that fondly brav'd their fate. Phillips.

Some valuing those of their own side or mind,
Still make themselves the measure of mankind:
Fondly we think we merit honour then,
When we but praise ourselves in other men. Pope.
Under those sacred leaves, secure
From common lightning of the skies,
He fondly thought he might endure
The flashes of Ardelia's eyes. Swift.

2. With great or extreme tenderness.
Ev'n before the fatal engine clos'd,
A wretched typh too fondly interpos'd:
Fate urg'd the sheers, and cut the typh in twain. Pope.

Fondly or severely kind. Savage.
FONDNESS. n. s. [from fond.]

1. Foolishness; weakness; want of sense want of judgment.

Fondness it were for any, being free,
To covet fetters, though they golden be. Spenser.

2. Foolish tenderness.
My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee;
But hence! tis gone: I give it to the winds. Addison.
Hopeless mother!

Whose fondness could compare her mortal offspring
To those which fair Latona bore to Jove. Prior.

3. Tender passion.
Your jealousy perverts my meaning still;
My very hate is construed into fondness. A. Phil.
Corinna, with that youthful air,
Is thirty, and a bit to spare:
Her fondness for a certain earl Began when I was but a girl. Swift.

4. Unreasonable liking.
They err that either through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing that is less than a sincere resolution of new obedience, attended with faithful endeavour, and meet fruits of this change. Hammond.

FONE. n. s. Plural of foe. Obsolete.
A barbarous troupe of clownish fone. Spenser.

FONT. n. s. [fons, Latin; fonte, French.] A stone vessel in which the water for holy baptism is contained in the church.

The presenting of infants at the holy font is by their godfathers. Hooker.

I have no name, no title;
No, not that name given me at the font. Shak.

FONTANEL. n. s. [fontanelle, French.] An issue; a discharge opened in the body.

A person plethorick, subject to hot defluxions, was advised to a fontanel in her arm. Wijeman of Infl.

FONTANGE. n. s. [from the name of the first wearer.] A knot of ribbands on the top of the head-dress. Out of use.

Those old-fashioned fontanges rose an ell above the head: they were pointed like steeples, and had long loose pieces of tresp, which were fringed, and hung down their backs. Addison.

FOOD. n. s. [fradan, Saxon; veeden, Dutch,
to feed; feed, Scott.]

1. Viaticals; provision for the mouth.

On my knees I beg,
That you'll vouchsafe me raiment, bed, and food. Shaksp.

Much food is in the tillage of the poor,
Prov. xiii. 23.

Under my lowly roof thou hast vouchsaf'd
To enter, and these earthly fruits to taste;
Food not of angels, yet accepted so,
As that more willingly thou could'st not seem
At heav'n's high feasts to have fed. Milton.

They give us food, which may with nectar vie,
And wax that does the absent sun supply. Haller.

2. Any thing that nourishes.

Give me some musick: musick, moody food
Of us that trade in love. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.
O dear son Edgar,

The food of thy abused father's wrath,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd fry, I had again. Shaksp. King Lear.

FOODFUL. adj. [food and full.] Fruitful;
full of food; plenteous.

There Titus was to see, who took his birth
From heav'n, his nursing from the foodful earth. Dryden.

FOODY. adj. [from feed.] Eatable; fit for food.

To vessels, wine she drew;
And into well sew'd sacks pour'd foody meal. Chapman.

FOOL. n. s. [ffol, Welch; fol, Islandick;
fel, French.]

1. One to whom nature has denied reason;
a natural; an idiot.

Do'st thou call me fool, boy?

—All thy other titles thou hast given away that thou wast born with. Shaksp. King Lear.

The fool multitude, that chuse by show,
Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach,
Which pry not to the interior. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

It may be asked, whether the eldest son, being a fool, shall inherit paternal power before the younger,
a wife man. Locke.

He thanks his stars he was not born a fool. Pope.

2. [In Scripture.] A wicked man.

The fool hath said in his heart there is no God.
Pf. xiv. 1.

3. A term of indignity and reproach.

To be thought knowing, you must first put the fool upon all mankind. Dryden's Juvenal, Preface.

4. One who counterfeits folly; a buffoon;
a jester.

Where's my knave, my fool! Go you, and call my fool hither. Shaksp. King Lear.

I scorn, although their drudge, to be their fool
or jester. Milton.

If this disguise fit not naturally on so grave a person, yet it may become him better than that fool's coat. Denham.

5. To play the FOOL. To play pranks like a hired jester; to jest; to make sport.

I returning where I left his armour, found another instead thereof, and armed myself therein to play the fool. Sidney.

6. To play the FOOL. To act like one void of common understanding.

Well, thus we play the fools with the time, and the spirits of the wife sit in the clouds and mock us.

Shaksp. Henry IV.

Is it worth the name of freedom to be at liberty to play the fool, and draw shame and misery upon a man's self? Locke.

7. To make a FOOL of. To disappoint; to defeat.

'Twere as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him to the field, and then to break promise with him, and make a fool of him.
Shaksp. Twelfth Night.

TO FOOL. v. n. [from the noun.] To trifle;
to toy; to play; to idle; to sport.

I, in this kind of merry fooling, am nothing to you; so you may continue and laugh at nothing still.
Shaksp. Tempest.

Fool not: for all may have,

If they dare try, a glorious life, a grave. Herbert.

If you have the luck to be court-fools, those that have either wit or honesty, you may fool withal, and spare not. Denham.

It must be an industrious youth that provides against age; and he that fools away the one, must either beg or starve in the other. L'Estrange.

He must be happy that knows the true measures of fooling. L'Estrange.

Is this a time for fooling? Dryden.

TO FOOL. v. a.

1. To treat with contempt; to disappoint;
to frustrate; to defeat.

And shall it in more shame be further spoken,
That you are fool'd, discarded, and shook off? Shak.
Him over-weaning

To over-reach; but with the serpent meeting, Fool'd and beguil'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If men loved to be deceived and fooled about their spiritual estate, they cannot take a surer course than by taking their neighbour's word for that, which can be known only from their own heart. South.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;

For fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit. Dryden.

I'm tir'd with waiting for this chemick gold,
Which fools us young, and beggars us when old,
Dryden.

I would advise this blinded set of men not to give credit to those, by whom they have been so often fool'd and imposed upon, Addison's Freeholder.

2. To infatuate; to make foolish.

If it be you that stir these daughters hearts Against their father, fool me not so much To hear it tamely. Shaksp. King Lear.

When I am read, thou feign'st a weak applause,
As if thou wert my friend, but art'st a cause.

§ II 2 This

This but thy judgment fools; the other way
Would both thy folly and thy spite betray. Ben Jonson.
It were an handsome plot,
But full of difficulties, and uncertain;
And he's so fool'd with downright honesty,
He'll ne'er believe it. Denham's Sophy.

A long and eternal adieu to all unlawful pleasures:
I will no longer be fooled or imposed upon by them.

A boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer and richer, perhaps fool him so far as to make him enjoy less in his riches than others in poverty.

3. To cheat: as, to fool one of his money.
FOOL'BORN. adj. [fool and born.] Foolish from the birth.

Reply not to me with a foolborn jest. Shak. H. IV.
FOOL'LERY. n. s. [from fool.]

1. Habitual folly, Foolery, Sir, does walk about the orb like the sun; it shines every where: I would be sorry, Sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with my mistress. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

2. An act of folly; trifling practise.
It is meer foolery to multiply distinct particulars in treating of things, where the difference lies only in words. Watts.

3. Object of folly.
That Pythagoras, Plato, or Orpheus believed in any of these fooleries, it cannot be suspected.

We are transported with fooleries, which, if we understood, we should despise. L'Estrange.

FOOL-HAPPY. adj. [fool and happy] Lucky without contrivance or judgment.

As when a ship, that flies fair under sail,
An hidden rock escaped unawares,
That lay in wait her wreck for to bewail:
The mariner, yet half amazed, stares
At perils past, and yet in doubt he dares
To joy at his fool-happy oversight. Fairy Queen.

FOOLHARDINESS. n. s. [from foolhardy.]
Mad rashness; courage without sense.

There is a difference betwixt daring and fool- hardiness: Lucan and Statius often ventured them too far, our Virgil never. Dryden.

A false glozing parasite would call his foolhar- diness valour, and then he may go on boldly because blindly. South.

FOOLHARDISE. n. s. [fool and hardise, French.] Foolhardiness; adventurousness without judgment. Obsolete.

More huge in strength than wife in works he was,
And reasop with foolhardise over-ran;
Stern melancholy did his courage pass,
And was, for terror more, all-arm'd in shining brass.

FOOLHARDY. adj. [fool and hardy.] Daring without judgment; madly adventurous;
foolishly bold.

One mother, when as her foolhardy child
Did come too near, and with his talons play,
Half dead through fear, her little babe reviv'd.

Some would be so foolhardy as to presume to be more of the cabinet council of God Almighty than the angels. Howel.

If any yet be so foolhardy,
T' expose themselves to vain jeopardy;
If they come wounded off, and lame,
No honour's got by such a maim. Hindibras.

FOOLTRAP. n. s. [fool and trap.] A snare to catch fools in: as a flytrap.

Betts at the first, were fooltraps, where the wife
Like spiders lay in ambush for the flies. Dryden.

FOOLISH. adj. [from fool.]

1. Void of understanding; weak of intellect.
Thou foolish woman, seek thou not our mourning?

Pray do not mock me;
I am a very foolish fond old man:
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakespeare.
He, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes look'd upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

2. Imprudent; indiscreet.

We are come off
Like Romans: neither foolish in our stands,
Nor cowardly in retire. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Ridiculous; contemptible.
It is a foolish thing to make a long prologue, and to be short in the story itself. 2 Mac. ii. 32.

What could the head perform alone,
If all their friendly aids were gone?
A foolish figure he must make;
Do nothing else but sleep and ake. Prior.

He allows himself in foolish hatreds and resentments against particular persons, without considering that he is to love every body as himself. Law.

4. [In Scripture.] Wicked; sinful.
FOOLISHLY. adv. [from foolish.] Weakly; without understanding. In Scripture, wickedly.

Although we boast our Winter sun looks bright,
And foolishly are glad to see it in its height;
Yet so much sooner comes the long and gloomy night.

FOOLISHNESS. n. s. [from foolish.]
1. Folly; want of understanding.

2. Foolish practice; actual deviation from the right.

Foolishness being properly a man's deviation from right reason, in point of practice, must needs consist in his pitching upon such an end as is unsuitable to his condition, or pitching upon means unsuitable to the compassing of his end. South.

Charm'd by their eyes, their manners I acquite,
And shape my foolishness to their desire. Prior.

FOOLSTONES. n. s. A plant. Miller.

FOOT. n. s. plural feet. [for; Saxon; voel, Dutch; fat, Scottish.]

1. The part upon which we stand.
The queen that bore thee,
Oft'ner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day she liv'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

His affection to the church was so notorious, that he never deterred it, till both it and he were over-run and trod under foot. Clarendon.

2. That by which any thing is supported in the nature of a foot: as, the foot of a table.

3. The lower part; the base.
Yond towers, whose wanton tops do bust the clouds, Mult kiss their own feet. Shak. Troilus and Cressida.
Fretting, by little and little, washes away and eats out both the tops and sides and feet of mountains.

4. The end: the lower part.
What dismal cries are those?
—Nothing; a trifling sum of misery,
New added to the foot of thy account:
Thy wife is seiz'd by force, and born away. Dryden.

5. The act of walking,
Antiochus departed, weening in his pride to make the land navigable, and the sea passable by foot.

6. On FOOT. Walking; without carriage.
Israel journeyed about six hundred thousand on foot.

The centurions and their charges billeted already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning. Shakespeare.

8. Infantry; footmen in arms. In this sense it has no plural.

Lufius gathered three score thousand choice men of foot, and five thousand horsemen. 1 Mac. iv. 28.
Himself with all his foot entered the town, his horse being quartered about it. Clarendon.

Thrice horse and foot about the fires are led,
And thrice with loud laments they wail the dead.

9. State; character; condition.

See on what foot we stand; a scanty shore,
The sea behind, our enemies before. Dryden's Æn.
In specifying the word Ireland, it would seem to insinuate that we are not upon the same foot with our fellow-subjects in England. Swift's Drapier's Letters.

What colour of excuse can be for the contempt with which we treat this part of our species, the negroes, that we should not put them upon the common foot of humanity, that we should only set an insignificant line upon the man who murders them?

10. Scheme; plan; settlement.
There is no wellwisher to this country without a little hope that in time the kingdom may be on a better foot. Swift.

I ask whether upon the foot of our constitution, as it stood in the reign of the late King James, a king of England may be deposed? Swift.

11. A state of incipient existence; first motion. Little used but in the following phrase.

If such a tradition were at any time set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult how it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson.

12. It seems to have been once proverbially used for the level, the square, par.

Were it not for this easy borrowing upon interest, men's necessities would draw upon them a most sudden undoing, in that they would be forced to sell their means, be it lands or goods, far under foot.

13. A certain number of syllables constituting a distinct part of a verse.

Fest, in our English versifying, without quantity and joints, be sure signs that the verse is either borndeformed, unnatural, or lame. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Didst thou hear these verses?
—O yes, I heard them all, and more too; for some o' them had in them more feet than the verses would bear. Shakespeare.

And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet. Pope.

14. Motion; action.
While other jests are something rank on foot.
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender to marry. Shakespeare.

In the government of the world the number and variety of the ends on foot, with the secret nature of most things to which they relate, must make a distinct remark of their congruity, in some cases very difficult, and in some unattainable. Grew.

15. Step.
This man's son would, every foot and anon, be taking some of his companions into the orchard.

16. A measure containing twelve inches:
supposed to be the length of a man's foot.

When it signifies measure, it has often, but vitiously foot in the plural.
An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight's space four foot deep within the earth, came forth no ways mouldy or rotten. Bacon.

To FOOT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dance; to tread wantonly; to trip.
Lonely the vale and full of horror stood,
Brown with the shade of a religious wood;
The moon was up, and shot a gleamy light;
He saw a quire of ladies in a round,
That featly footing seem'd to skim the ground. Dryd.

2. To walk; not ride; not fly.
By this the dreadful beast drew nigh to land,
Half flying, and half footing in his hate. Fairy Queen.
Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do foot by night. Shakespeare.

The man set the boy upon the ass, and footed it himself. L'Estrange.

If you are for a mesry jaunt, I'll try, for once, who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such a pretended saint. South.

To FOOT. v. a.

1. To spurn; to kick.
You, that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger cur over your threshold. Shakespeare.

2. To settle; to begin to fix.

What

What confed'acy have you with the traitors Late footed in the kingdom? Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To tread.
Saint Withold footed the ice the wold:
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right. Shakesp.
There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd boy, they fealty foot the green. Tickel.

4. To hold with the foot. Not in use.
We are the earth, and they,
Like moles within us, heave and cast about;
And till they foot and clutch their prey,
They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

FOOTBALL. n. f. [foot and ball.]
1. A ball commonly made of a blown bladder, cased with leather, driven by the foot.
Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus? Shakesp.
Such a Winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of Winter; as football, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice.
Peacbam.
As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at football, care of victory
Makes them salute so rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest. Waller.
One rolls along a football to his foes,
One with a broken truncheon deals his blows. Dryd.

2. The sport or practice of kicking the football.
He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise.
Arbutnot and Pope's Mart. Scribl.

FOOTBOY. n. f. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.
Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This honest man, wait like a lowly footboy
At chamber-door? Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
Though I had nobody to assist but a footboy, yet
I made shift to try a pretty number of things. Boyle.
Whenever he imagines advantages will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it. Swift.

FOOTBRIDGE. n. f. [foot and bridge.] A bridge on which passengers walk; a narrow bridge.
Palemon's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, loaded it so long, 'till he broke that which would have born a bigger burden. Sidney.

FOOTCLOATH. n. f. [foot and cloath.] A sumpter cloth.
Three times a-day my footcloath horse did stumble,
And started when he look'd upon the Tower,
As loth to bear me to the slaughter-house. Shakesp.

FOOTED. adj. [from foot.] Shaped in the foot.
Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Grew.

FOOTFIGHT. n. f. [foot and fight.] A fight made on foot, in opposition to that on horseback.
So began our footfight in such sort, that we were well entered to blood of both sides. Sidney.

FOOTHOLD. n. f. [foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.
All fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast laid it flat on the ground. L'Estrange.
He's at the top: he has nothing above him to aspire to, nor any foothold left him to come down
by. L'Estrange.

FOOTING. n. f. [from foot.]
1. Ground for the foot.
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and advent'rous spirit
As to o'erwalk a current roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear. Shak. Hen. VI.
As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew the footing sound, for all the flood. Davies.
In ascents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Support; root.
Set cloven stakes; and wond'rous to behold,
Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,
And the dry poles produce a living race. Dryd. Virg.

3. Basis; foundation.
All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here: the mind stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered.
Locke.
The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move, for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its fountain and original. Locke.

4. Place; possession.
Whether the unctuous exhalations are Fir'd by the sun, or seeming so alone;
Or each some more remote and slippery star,
Which loies, footing when to mortals shewn. Dryden.

5. Tread; walk.
As he forward moved his footing old,
So backward still was turn'd his wrinkled face.
Spenser.
I would outright you did no body come:
But hark, I hear the footing of a man. Shakespeare.
Break off, break off; I feel the different sound
Of some chaste footing near about this ground. Milton.

6. Dance.
Make holyday: your rye straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encoun'er every one In country footing. Shakespeare's Tempest.

7. Steps; road; track.
He grew strong among the Irish; and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name. Spenser on Ireland.
Like running weeds, that have no certain root;
or like footings up and down, impossible to be traced. Bacon's Henry VII.

8. Intranse; beginning; establishment.
Ever since our nation had any footing in this land, the state of England did desire to perfect the conquest. Davies.
The defeat of Colonel Bellasis gave them their first footing in Yorkshire. Clarendon.
No useful arts have yet found footing here;
But all untaught and savage does appear. Dryden.

9. State; condition; settlement.
Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt as to taxes. Arbutnot.

FOOTLICKER. n. f. [foot and lick.] A slave;
an humble fawner; one who licks the
foot.
Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own for ever; and I, thy Caliban,
For ay thy footlicker. Shakespeare's Tempest.

FOOTMAN. n. f. [foot and man.]
1. A soldier that marches and fights on foot.
The numbers levied by her lieutenant did consist of footmen three millions, of horsemen one million.
Raleigh's History.

2. A low menial servant in livery.
He was carried in a rich chariot, litterwise, with two horses at either end, and two footmen on each side, Bacon.
Like footmen running before coaches,
To tell the inn what lord approaches. Prior.

3. One who practises to walk or run.
FOOTMANSHIP. n. f. [from footman.] The art or faculty of a runner.
The Irish archers espying this, suddenly broke up, and committed the safety of their lives to their nimble footmanship. Hayward.
Yet, says the fox, I have baffled more of them with my wiles and shifts than ever you did with your footmanship. L'Estrange.

FOOTPACE. n. f. [foot and pace.]
1. Part of a pair of stairs, whereon, after four or five steps, you arrive to a broad place, where you make two or three paces before you ascend another step, thereby to ease the legs in ascending the rest of the stairs. Moxon.

2. A pace no faster than a slow walk.

FOOTPAD. n. f. [foot and pad.] A highwayman that robs on foot, not on horseback.

FOOTPATH. n. f. [foot and path.] A narrow way which will not admit horses or carriages.
Know'st thou the way to Dover?
—Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shak.

FOOTPOST. n. f. [foot and post.] A post or messenger that travels on foot.
For carrying such letters, every thoroughfare weekly appointeth a footpost, whose dispatch is well near as speedy as the horses. Carew.

FOOTSTALL. n. f. [foot and stall.] A woman's stirrup.

FOOTSTEP. n. f. [foot and step.]
1. Trace; track; impression left by the foot.
Clear-sighted reason, wisdom's judgment leads,
And sense, her vassal, in her footsteps treads. Denham.
A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, wherever he has the footsteps of others to follow. Locke.

2. Token; mark; notice given.
Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our system, if there we may trace any visible footsteps of Divine wisdom and beneficence. Bentley's Sermons.

3. Example.
FOOTSTOOL. n. f. [foot and stool.] Stool on which he that sits places his feet.
Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security. Shak. Henry VI.
They whose sacred office 'tis to bring Kings to obey their God, and men their king,
By these mysterious links to fix and tye
Men to the footstool of the Deity. Denham's Sophy.
Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heaven his throne.
Roscommon.
By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his footstool.
Stillingfleet.

FOP. n. f. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology.] A simpleton; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, drefs, and flutter; an impertinent.
A whole tribe of fops,
Got 'tween asleep and wake. Shakesp. King Lear.
When such a positive abandon'd fop,
Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company. Roscommon.
The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat. L'Estrange.
In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow;
When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers
Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind
Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws. Swift.

FOPDOODLE. n. f. [fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.
Where sturdy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fopdoodle. Hudibras.

FOPPERY. n. f. [from fop.]
1. Folly; impertinence.
Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the surfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters,
the

the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity. Shakefp. King Lear.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in. Stillingfleet.

But though we fetch from Italy and France Our fopperies of tune and modes of dance, Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense. Granville.

I wish I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift.

FOPPISH. adj. [from fop.]

1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year; For wise men are grown foppish, And know not how their wits to wear, Their manners are so apish. Shakefp. King Lear.

2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.

With him the present still some virtues have; The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave; The slothful negligent, the foppish neat, The lewd are airy, and the silly discreet. Carth.

The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish; so that the Emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women. Arbutnot.

You would know who is rude and ill-natured, who is vain and foppish, who lives too high, and who is in debt. Law.

FOPPISHLY. adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously,

FOPPISHNESS. n. s. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or ostentatious vanity.

How quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object!

For this the foolish, over-careful fathers,

Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains
with care,

Their bones with industry: for this, engross'd

The canker'd heaps of strong achieved gold:

For this they have been thoughtful to invest

Their sons with arts and martial exercises.

Shakefp.

The kingdom of God was first rent by ill counsel; upon which counsel there are set, for our in-

Dryden.

It is a reasonable account for any man to give,
why he does not live as the greatest part of the world do, that he has no mind to die as they do, and perish with them.

Tillotson.

33. Notwithstanding.

This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philojudæus ex-presseth.

Hooker.

God's desertion shall, for ought he knows, the next minute supervene.

Decay of Piety.

Probability supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing yet certainly determined on either side.

South.

For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a contrivance to fright us.

Swift.

If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system.

Bentley.

34. To the use of; to be used in.

The oak for nothing ill,

The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill.

Spenser.

Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason.

Tillotson.

35. In consequence of.

For love they force through thickets of the wood,

They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood.

Dryd.

36. In recompence of; in return of.

Now, for so many glorious actions done,

For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,

I mean to crown a bowl for Cæsar's health;

Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,

Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.

Dryden.

First the wily wizard must be caught;

For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught.

Dryd.

37. In proportion to.

He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall.

Shak.

As he could see clear, for thole times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then,
by human policy.

Bacon.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!

Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;

Too noble for revenge.

Dryden's Juvenal.

38. By means of; by interposition of.

Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will.

Hale.

Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case,
if it were not for God?

Tillotson.

39. In regard of; in preservation of.

I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;

But could not get him for my heart.

Shakefp.

I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls.

Addison's Spect.

40. For all. Notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure-you, for all my apparel, there is nothing I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprize.

Sidney.

For all the carefulness of the Christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up.

Knolles's History.

But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew the footing found for all the flood.

Davies.

They resolute, for all this, do proceed

Unto that judgment.

Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the Emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home.

Stillingfleet.

Though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will, for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account.

Boyle.

She might have passed over my businesses; but my rabble is not to be mumbled up in silence, for all her pertness.

Dryden.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition.

South.

41. For so. In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before so, the sign of the infinitive mood, to note the final cause. As, I come for so see you, for I love to see you: in the same sense with the French pour. Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible.

But this distinction was by the best writers

sometimes forgotten; and, for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous, is now always omitted.

Who shall let me now

On this vile body for to wreak my wrong?

Fairy Q.

A large posterity.

Up to your happy palaces may mount,

Of blessed saints for to increase the count.

Spenser.

These

These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain. Bacon.

FOR. conj.

1. The word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth with us as we with torches deal,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,
Who for another year, dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one Winter more would hold. Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit:
For the first matter loves variety less. Cowley.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God. Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that. It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men. Spenser on Ireland.

Jealous souls will not be answer'd so:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous. Shakesp. Othello.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me. Shakesp. Othello.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had laid;
But, for his great Creator would the same,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame. Fairfax.

Many exercises of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance. Bacon's Natural History.

3. FOR as much. In regard to that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard: we somewhat incline to length, lest overquick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of. Hooker.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water. Arbut.

4. FOR why. Because; for this reason that.

Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces; for why,
Solyman purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him. Knolles.

TO FORAGE. v. n. [from foris, abroad, Lat.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance. Not in use.

Forage, and run
To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh. Shak.

2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night,
Wolves urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey. Denham.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn,
and the dam went abroad to forage for them. L'Estr.
Nor dare they stray

When rain is promis'd or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their wat'ring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make. Dryden.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.

His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his lion's whelp Forage in blood of French nobility. Shakesp.

TO FORAGE. v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.

They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole land. Spenser.

The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army. South.

FORAGE. n. f. [from forage, German and French; from foris, Latin.]

1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.

One way a band-select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes and their bleating lambs, over the plains
Their booty. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Provisions sought abroad.

Some o'er the publick magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide. Dryden.

3. Provisions in general.

Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd. Dryd.

FORAMINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Latin.]

Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the sound, will deaden it; but in the passage of the sound they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon's Natural History.

TO FORBEAR. v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part. forborn. [from forbarnan, Saxon. For has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear: or deprava-tion; as, forswear, and other powers not easily explained.]

1. To cease from any thing; to intermit.

Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.

2. To pause; to delay.

I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two,
Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong,
I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakesp. Hamlet.

3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.

He forbear to go forth. 1 Sa. xxiil. 13.
At this he started, and forbore to swear;
Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryden.

The wolf, the lion, and the bear,
When they their prey in pieces tear,
To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.

4. To restrain any violence of temper; to be patient.

By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Prov. xv. 1.

TO FORBEAR. v. a.

1. To decline; to avoid voluntarily.

Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shakesp. King Lear.
So angry bulls the combat do forbear,
When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.

2. To abstain from; to shun to do; to omit.

If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon.
There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South.

3. To spare; to treat with clemency.

With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. Eph. iv. 2.

4. To withhold.

Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. 2 Chron. xxxv. 21.

FORBEARANCE. n. f. [from forbear.]

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice.

True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. Shak.
This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South.

Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing, any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermision of something.

3. Command of temper.
Have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakesp. King Lear.

4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness.

Nor do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding, but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present Majesty. Addison's Freeholder.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBEARER. n. f. [from forbear.] An intermitter; interceptor of any thing.

The West as a father all goodness doth bring,

The East a forbearer, no manner of thing. Tusser.

TO FORBID. v. a. pret. I forbade; part.
forbidden, or forbid. [from forbēdan, Saxon;
verbieden, Dutch.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.

A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean; have I not forbid her my house? Shakesp. Hamlet.
It is

The practice and the purpose of the king,
From whose obedience I forbid my soul. Shakesp.
By tasting of that fruit forbid,
Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Darwin.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.

All hatred of persons, by very many Christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Spenser.

The chaste and holy race
Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryd. Æn.

2. To command to forbear any thing.

She with so sweet a rigour forbad him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney.

They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws.
Judith, xi. 12.

3. To oppose; to hinder.

The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilateth it.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The plaster alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it as well as forbid new humour. Bacon.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light,
A blaze of glory that forbids the sight!
O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd,
And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

4. To accurse; to blast. Now obsolete.

To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse.

Sleep shall neither night nor day

Hang upon his penthouse lid;

He shall live a man forbid. Shakesp. Macbeth.

TO FORBID. v. n. To utter a prohibition.

Now the good gods forbid,
That our renowned Rome
Should now eat up her own! Shakesp. Coriolanus.

FORBIDDANCE. n. f. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

How hast thou yielded to transgress

The strict forbiddance! how to violate

The sacred fruit forbidden? Milton's Paradise Lost.

FORBIDDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't,

That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shak.

FORBIDDEN. a. f. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.

This was a bold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the for-bidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown.

Other care, perhaps,

May have diverted from continual watch

Our great forbidder! Milton's Paradise Lost.

FORBIDDING. participial adj. [from forbid.]

Raising

Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.

Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible. A. Hill.

FORCE, n. f. [force, French; fortis, Latin.]

1. Strength; vigour; might; active power.

He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. Shaksp. Much ado about nothing.

A ship, which hath struck sail, doth run By force of that force which before it won. Denne.

2. Violence.

Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown, Which now they hold by force, and not by right. Shakespeare.

The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride By force away, and then by force enjoy'd; But I by free consent. Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy.

Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipped, hath, in regard of us, great virtue, force, and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. Hooker.

No definitions, no suppositions of any sect, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Locke.

4. Validness; power of law.

A testament is of force after men are dead. Heb. ix.

Not long in force this charter stood; Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood. Denham.

5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural.

O Thou! whose captain I account myself, Look on my forces with a gracious eye. Shak. R. III.

The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.

A greater force than that which here we find, Ne'er press'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind. Waller.

Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.

6. Destiny; necessity; fatal compulsion.

To FORCE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compel; to constrain.

Dangers are light, if they once seem light; and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. Bacon.

I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. Swift's Examiner.

The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. Broome's View of Epic Poem.

2. To overpower by strength.

O that fortune Had brought me to the field where thou art fam'd To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw, I should have forc'd thee soon with other arms. Milt.

With fates averse, the rout in arms resort, To force their monarch, and insult the court. Dryden.

3. To impel; to press; to draw or push by main strength.

Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them. Deut. xx. 19.

Stooping, the spear descended on his chine, Just where the bone distinguish'd either loin: It stuck so fast, so deeply bury'd lay, That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away. Dryden.

4. To enforce; to urge.

Three blust'ring nights, born by the southern blast, I floated, and discover'd land at last: High on a mounting wave my head I bore, Forcing my strength, and gath'ring to the shore. Dryden's Æn.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere, I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude, And with forc'd fingers rude Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year. Milton.

5. To drive by violence or power.

This way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Dreay of Piety.

To free the ports, and ope the Punique land To Trojan guests; left, ignorant of fate, The queen might force them from her town and state. Dryd.

6. To gain by violence or power.

VOL. I

My heart is your's; but oh! you left it here Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear:

If they forc'd from me one kind look or word, Could you not that, nor that small part afford? Dryden.

7. To storm; to take or enter by violence.

Troy wall'd so high, Atrides might as well have forc'd the sky. Waller.

Heav'n from all ages wisely did provide This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide; Who with four hundred foot, and forty horse, Dare boldly go a new-found world to force. Dryd.

8. To ravish; to violate by force.

Force her.—I like it not. Dryden.

9. To constrain; to distort; not to obtain naturally or with ease.

Our general taste in England is for epigram, turns of wit, and forc'd conceits. Addison's Spectator.

10. To man; to strengthen by soldiers; to garrison.

Here let them lye, 'Till famine and the ague eat them up: Were they not forc'd with those that should be our's, We might have met them dreadful, beard to beard. Shakespeare.

If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oroonoke, and that the passages be already forced, then be well advised how you land. Raleigh's Apology.

11. To FORCE out. To extort.

The heat of the dispute had forced out from Luther expressions that seemed to make his doctrine run higher than really it did. Atterbury.

To FORCE, v. n. To lay stress upon.

This word I have only found in the following passage.

That morning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armor put on his backpiece before, and his breastplate behind; the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries; but if I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king. Camden's Remains.

FORCEDLY, adv. [from force.] Violently; constrainedly; unnaturally.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcedly to the present form of the earth and the waters. Burnet's Theory.

FORCEFUL, adj. [force and full.] Violent; strong; driven with great might; impetuous.

Why, what need we Commune with you of this, but rather follow Our forceful instigation. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

Against the steed he threw His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew, Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden's Æn.

Were it by chance, or forceful destiny, Which forms in causes first what'er shall be, Assisted by a friend one moonless night, This Palamon from prison took his flight. Dryden.

He pois'd in air, the javelin sent, Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went. Pope.

FORCEFULLY, adv. [from forceful.] Violently; impetuously.

FORCELESS, adj. [from force.] Having little force; weak; feeble; impotent.

FORCEPS, n. f. [Latin.]

Forceps properly signifies a pair of tongs; but is used for an instrument in chirurgery, to extract any thing out of wounds, and the like occasions. Quincy.

FORCER, n. f. [from force.]

1. That which forces, drives, or constrains.

2. The embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.

The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forcers. Wilkins's Dædalus.

FORCIBLE, adj. [from forte.]

1. Strong; mighty: opposed to weak. That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.

Who therefore can invent With what more forcible we may offend Our yet unwounded enemies? Milton.

2. Violent; impetuous.

Jersey, belov'd by all; for all must feel The influence of a form and mind, Where comely grace and constant virtue dwell. Like mingl'd streams, more forcible when join'd. Jersey shall at thy altars stand, Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

3. Efficacious; active; powerful.

Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken; and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of the rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Natural History.

4. Prevalent; of great influence.

How forcible are right words? Job. God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation so forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break asunder. Raleigh's History.

5. Done by force; suffered by force.

He swifter far, Me overtook, his mother all dismay'd, And in embraces forcible and foul Ingend'ring with me. Milton.

The abdication of King James, the advocates on that side look upon to have been forcible and unjust, and consequently void. Swift.

6. Valid; binding; obligatory.

FORCIBLENESS, n. f. [from forcible.] Force; violence.

FORCIBLY, adv. [from forcible.]

1. Strongly; powerfully.

The Gospel offers such considerations as are fit to work very forcibly upon two of the most swaying and governing passions in the mind, our hopes and our fears. Tillotson.

2. Impetuously; with great strength.

3. By violence; by force. He himself with greedy great desire Into the castle enter'd forcibly. Fairy Queen.

FORCIPATED, adj. [from forceps.] Formed like a pair of pincers to open and inclose.

The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind. Brown. When they have seized their prey, they will so tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters. Derham.

FORD, n. f. [from Saxon, from farian, to pass.]

1. A shallow part of a river where it may be passed without swimming.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword; They pass the stream, when she had found the ford. Fairfax.

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards The ford, and of itself the water flies All taste of living wight. Milton's Paradise Lost. Rise, wretched widow! rise; nor undeplor'd Permit my ghost to pass the Stygian ford: But rise, prepar'd in black to mourn thy perish'd lord. Dryden.

To FORD, v. a. [from the noun.] To pass without swimming. Adam's shin-bones must have contained a thousand and fathom, and much more, if he had founded the ocean. Raleigh's History.

Fording his current where thou find'st it low. Drom.

FOR'DABLE. adj. [from ford.] Passable without swimming.

Pliny placeth the Schenitz upon the Euphrates, where the same beginneth to be fordable. Raleigh.

A countryman founded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable: and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deepest; and, on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise. L'Estrange.

FORE. adj. [from fore, Saxon.]

1. Anterior; that which is before; not behind.

Though there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they move strongest and go farthest in the fore lines from the first local impression. Bacon.

2. That which comes first in a progressive motion.

Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Cbeysne.

FORE. adv.

1. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.

Each of them will bear six demiculverins and fourakers, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Fore is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, of which some examples shall be given. A vitious orthography has confounded for and fore in composition.

To FOREADVISE. v. n. [from fore and advise.] To counsel early; to counsel before the time of action, or the event.

Thus to have said,

As you were foreadvise'd had touch'd his spirit, And tried his inclination. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To FOREAPPOINT. v. n. [from fore and appoint.] To order beforehand.

To FOREARM. v. a. [from fore and arm.] To provide for attack or resistance before the time of need.

A man should fix and forearm his mind with this persuasion, that, during his passion, whatsoever is offered to his imagination tends only to deceive. South.

He forearms his care

With rules to push his fortune, or to bear. Dryden.

To FOREBODE. v. n. [from fore and bode.]

1. To prognosticate; to foretell.

An ancient augur, skill'd in future fate, With these foreboding words restrains their hate. Dryden.

2. To foreknow; to be prescient of; to feel a secret sense of something future.

Fate makes you deaf, while I in vain implore: My heart forebodes I ne'er shall see you more. Dryd. My soul foreboded I should find the bow'r Of some fell monster, fierce with barb'rous pow'r. Pope.

FOREBODER. n. s. [from forebode.]

1. A prognosticator; a soothsayer.

Your raven has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet: a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder. L'Estrange.

2. A foreknower.

FOREBY. prep. [from fore and by.] Near; hard by; fast by.

Not far away he hence doth won

To FORECAST. v. a. [from fore and cast.]

To FOREGO. v. a. [from fore and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign. Is

FOR

FOR

FOR

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?
If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will will forego. Spenser.
Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither forgiven nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them. Spenser.
He is a great adventurer, said he,
That hath his sword through hard essay foregone;
And now hath vowed, till he avenged be
Of that despite, never to wear a none. Fairy Qu.
Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to have one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees. Hooker.
Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego
So good, so noble, and so true a master. Shakespeare.
Let us not forego
That for a trifle which was bought with blood. Shakespeare.
How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd
To live again in these wild woods forlorn! Milton.
This argument might prevail with you to forego a little of your repose for the publick benefit. Dryden.
What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another; and therefore they see nothing in it for which they should forego a present enjoyment. Locke.
1. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]
By our remembrances of days foregone,
Such were our faults: O! then we thought them not. Shakespeare.
It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch. Raleigh.
Reflect upon the two foregoing objections. Boyle.
This foregoing remark gives the reason why imitation pleases. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
I was seated in my elbow-chair, where I had indulged the foregoing speculations. Addison.
In the foregoing part of this work I promised proofs. Woodward.
3. To lose.
This is the very ecstasy of love,
Whose violent property foregoes itself,
And leaves the will to desperate undertakings. Shakespeare.
FOREGO'ER. n. s. [from forego.] Ancestor; progenitor.
Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive Than our foregoers. Shakespeare.
FOR'EGROUND. n. s. [from fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.
All agree that white can subsist on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed to be in an open field. Dryden.
FOR'EHAND, n. s. [from fore and hand.]
1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.
2. The chief part. Not in use.
The great Achilles whom opinion crowns
The finew and the forehand of our host. Shakespeare.

You'll say she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the forehand sin. Shakespeare.
FOR'EHAND'ED. n. s. [from fore and hand.]
1. Early; timely.
If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and forebanded care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time. Taylor.
2. Formed in the foreparts.
He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely forebanded: mark but the cleanness of his shapes too. Dryden.
FOR'EHAND. n. s. [from fore and head.]
1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakespeare. Coriolanus.
Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And moulded ev'ry feature from my face:
Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes. Dryden.
2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity. The forehead is the part on which shame visibly operates.
A man of confidence presseth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these med of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Collier.
I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply. Swift.
FOR'EHOLDING. n. s. [from fore and hold.]
Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.
How are superstitious men haggard out of their wits with the fancy of omens foreholdings, and old wives tales. L'Estrange.
FO'REIGN. adj. [from forain, French, forano, Spanish; from foris, Latin.]
1. Not of this country; not domestick.
Your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home. Shakespeare.
The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts.
The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestick and foreign writers. Atterbury.
The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy. Addison's Freeb.
2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.
I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart. Addison.
Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addison.
This design is not foreign from some peoples thoughts. Swift.
3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.
They will not stick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,
That he ran mad and died. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.
4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forinsecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.
5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.
There are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mould in their ill-natur'd land Induce. Phillips.
FO'REIGNER. n. s. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.
Joy is such a foreigner,
So meer a stranger to my thoughts I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sophy.
To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong'd a friend, a kinsman, and a son. Dryden's Æn.
Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs, are all foreigners. Addison.
Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.
FO'REIGNNESS. n. s. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right.
TO FOREIMAGINE. v. a. [from fore and image.] To conceive or fancy before proof.
We are within compass of a foreimagined possibility in that behalf. Camden's Remains.
TO FOREJUDGE. v. a. [from fore and judge.] To judge beforehand; to be prepossessed; to prejudge.
TO FOREKNOW. v. a. [from fore and know.]
To have prescience of; to foresee.
We foreknow that the sun will rise and set, that all men born in the world shall die again; that after Winter the spring shall come; after the Springs Summer and Harvest; yet is not our foreknowledge the cause of any of those. Raleigh.
He foreknew John should not suffer a violent death, but go into his grave in peace. Brown.
Calchas the sacred seer, who had in view Things present and the past, and things to come foreknew. Dryden's Iliad.
Who would the miseries of man foreknow?
Not knowing, we but share our part of woe. Dryden.
FOREKNOWABLE. adj. [from foreknow.] Possible to be known before they happen.
It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances. Morse.
FOREKNOWLEDGE. n. s. [from fore and knowledge.] Prescience; knowledge of that which has not yet happened.
Our being in Christ by eternal foreknowledge saveth us not without our actual and real adoption into the fellowship of his saints in this present world. Hooker.
I told him you was asleep; he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore chuses to speak with you. Shakespeare.
If I foreknew,
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown. Milton.
I hope the foreknowledge you had of my esteem for you, is the reason that you do not dislike my letters. Pope.
FO'RELAND. n. s. [from fore and land.] A promontory; headland; high land jutting into the sea; a cape.
As when a ship, by skilful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft to steers, and shifts her sails. Milton?
TO FORELAY. v. a. [from fore and lay.]
1. To lay wait for; to intrap by ambush.
A serpent shoots his sting at unaware;
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller:
The man lies murder'd while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake. Dryden.
2. To contrive antecedently.
TO FO'RELIFT. v. a. [from fore and lift.] To raise aloft any interior part.
So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast;
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of his new-comen guest. Spenser.
FO'RELOCK. n. s. [from fore and lock.] The hair that grows from the forepart of the head.
Tell her the joyous time will not be staid.
Unless she do him by the forelock take. Spenser.
Hyacinthine locks,
Round from his parted forelock manly hung,
Clust'ring, but not beneath his shoulder's broad. Milton.
Zeal and duty are not slow,
But on occasion's forelock watchful wait. Milton.
Time is painted with a lock before, and bald behind, signifying thereby that we must take time by the forelock; for when it is once past, there is no recalling it. Swift.
FO'REMAN. n. s. [from fore and man.] The first or chief person.
He is a very sensible man, shoots flying, and has been several times foreman of the petty jury. Addison.

The next, could of things present best advise;

The third, things past could keep in memory.

Fairy Queen.

If there be any thing foreseen that is not usual, be armed for it by any hearty though a short prayer, and an earnest resolution beforehand, and then watch when it comes.

Taylor.

At his foreseen approach, already quake

The Caspian kingdoms and Neotian lake:

Their fears behold the tempest from afar,
And threat'ning oracles denounce the war.

Dryden.

2. To provide for; with to. Out of use.

A king against a storm must foresee to a convenient stock of treasure.

Bacon.

TO FORESHAM'E. v. a. [fore and shame.]

To shame; to bring reproach upon.

Oh bill, foreshaming

Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie

Without a monument.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

What other the gospel than the law fulfilled?

Hooker.

FO'RESIGHT. n. f. [fore and sight.]

1. Prescience; prognostication; foreknowledge. The accent anciently on the last syllable.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,

Here sleep below; while thou to foresight wak'st!

As once thou sleep'st whilst she to life was form'd.

Milton.

2. Provident care of futurity.

He had a sharp foresight, and working wit,
That never idle was, ne once could rest a whit.

Spenser.

In matters of arms he was both skilful and industrious, and as well in foresight as resolution present and great.

Hayward.

Difficulties and temptations will more easily be borne or avoided, if with prudent foresight we arm ourselves against them.

Rogers.

FORESIGHTFUL. adj. [foresight and full.]

Now the illustrious nymph return'd again,
Brings every grace triumphant in her train:
The wond'ring Nereids, though they rais'd no storm, Foreslow'd her passage to behold her form. Dryden.

2. To neglect; to omit

When the rebels were on Blackheath, the king knowing well that it stood him upon, by how much the more he had hitherto protracted the time in not encountering them, by so much the sooner to dispatch with them, that it might appear to have been no coldness in foreslowing, but wisdom in chusing his time, resolved with speed to assail them.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Our good purposes foreslowed are become our tormentors upon our death-bed. Bishop Hall.

Citizens, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide foreslow;
Some such have been: but, ah! by tempest's spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan
That few were such, and now these few are none.

P. Fletcher.

To FORESLOW, v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
For yet is hope of life and victory,
Foreslow no longer, make we hence again. Shak.

To FORESPEAK, v. n. [fore and speak.]

1. To predict; to forelay; to foreshow; to foretell.

Old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names. Camden's Remains.

2. To forbid. [From for and speak.]

Thou hast forespoke my being in these wars,
And say'st it is not fit. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

FORESPE'NT, adj. [fore and spent.]

1. Wasted; tired; spent.

After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost forespent with speed. Shak.

2. Forepassed; past. [Fore and spent.]

Is not enough thy evil life forespent? Fairy Q.

You shall find his vanities forespent,
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus.
Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shakespeare.

3. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice. Shakespeare.

FORESPUR'RER, n. s. [fore and spur.] One that rides before.

A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly Summer was at hand,
As this forespurrier comes before his lord. Shakespeare.

FOREST, n. s. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chafe but feed in continual danger of life.

Hooker.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Duninane's high hill Shall come against him.

—That will never be:

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champagnes, but grafting, and not overgrown with beath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head. Reform.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forests, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure. The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agistors, regards, bailiffs, and beedles. The chief property of a forest is the swainmote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pyepowders to a fair.

Cowel.

To FORESTALL, v. a. [fore and tallan, Sax.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech; do not forestall
By lavishness thine own and others wit,
As if thou mad'st thy will, Herbert.

What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid. Milt.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap forestall.
Fairy Queen.

What's in thy prayer, but this twofold force
To be forestalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

But for my tears,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shakespeare.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I will not forestall your judgment of the rest.

Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He bold spake, Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place at erit,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee. Fairy Qn.

4. To deprive by something prior: with of. Not in use.

May

Adamantean proof. Milton's Agonists.

FORGE'T. v. a. preter. forgot; part.
forgotten, or forgot. [forzytan, Saxon;
vergeten, Dutch.]

1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not forgot
Which ne'er I did remember; to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. Shakespeare.

When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard. Shakespeare.

Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Ecclef. xxxvii. 6.
No sooner was our deliverance compleated, but we forgot our danger and our duty. Atterbury.
Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget; yet I will not forget thee.

Isa. xlix. 5.

If we might forget ourselves, or forget God; if we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing,
at every time, and every place. Law.

The mals of mean forgotten things. Anon.

FORGETFUL. adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.

2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethean flood,
In large forgetful draughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their irksome years.
Dryd. Æn.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful; careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers. Heb. xiii. 2.
The Queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

Have you not love to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother gave me,
Makes me forgetful? Shakespeare. Julius Caesar.

I, in fact, a real interell have,
Which to my own advantage I would save;
And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend
To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGETFULNESS. n. f. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And steep my senses in forgetfulness? Shakespeare.

All birds and beasts be hush'd; sleep steals away
The wild desires of men and toils of day;
And brings, descending, through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope's Statius.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forgetfulness of her duty. Hooker.

FORGETIVE. adj. [from forge.] That may forge or produce. A word, I believe, peculiar to Shakespeare.

Good sherrie sack ascends me into the brain, dries me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble shapes, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit.
Shakespeare.

FORGETTER. n. f. [from forget.]

1. One that forgets.

2. A careless person.

TO FORGIVE. v. a. [forzytan, Saxon.

1. To pardon a person; not to punish.

Then heaven forgive him too! Shakespeare.

I do beseech your grace for charity;

If ever any malice in your heart

Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.

Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all. Shakespeare.
Slowly provok'd, she easily forgives. Prior.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Is. xxxiii. 24.

If prayers

Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,
That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty and infirmer sex forgiven,
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton.

3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and forgave him the debt.
Mat. xviii. 27.

FORGIVENESS. n. f. [forzyfennisse, Sax.]

1. The act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and forgive-nesses. Daniel.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee. Prayer of Ma.
Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;
But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong.
Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents. South.

4. Tendernefs; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroick principles of meeknefs, forgiveness, bounty, and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent.
Spratt.

Mercy above did hourly plead
For her resemblance here below;
And mild forgiveness intercede
To stop the coming blow. Dryden.

5. Remission of a fine, penalty, or debt.

FORGIVER. n. f. [from forgive.] One who pardons.

Of thee could be forgotten, but thy fall. Denham.
The soft ideas of the cheerful note,
Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot. Prior.

TO FORHA'IL. v. a. [An old word. Probably for forhaul, from for and haul.] To harrass; tear; torment.

All this long tale,

Nought easeth the care that doth me forbail.
Spenser's Past.

FORK. n. f. [furca, Latin; fforch, Welsh;
fourche, French.]

1. An instrument divided at the end into two or more points or prongs, used on many occasions.

At Midsummer down with the brambles and brakes,
And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes.
Tusser.

The vicar first, and after him the crew,
With forks and staves the felon to pursue,
Ran Coll our dog. Dryden's Nun's Priest.
I dine with forks that have but two prongs. Swift.

2. It is sometimes used for the point of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make from the shaft.
—Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart. Shakespeare. King Lear.

3. A point.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the ancients, that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning, and melting. Addison.

TO FORK. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The corn beginneth to fork. Mansier's Ilusb.

FORKED. adj. [from fork.] Opening into two or more parts.

Naked he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife. Shakespeare.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shakespeare.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools
Should in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches goar'd. Shakespeare.

He would have spoke;
But hifs for hifs return'd, with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Ye dragons, whose contagious breath
Peoples the dark retreats of death,
Change your fierce hissing into joyful song,
And praise your Maker with your forked tongue.
Roscommon.

Ediloons it fled away, and might no where be seen.
Fairy Queen.

FORKY. adj. [from fork.] Forked; furcated;
opening into two parts.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope's Messiah.

FORLORE. [The preterite and participle of the Saxon forleopen, in Dutch verloren.]
Deserted; forsook; forsaken. Obsolete.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore
Of swift Eurotas, or on Cynthus' green,
Where all the nymphs have her forlore. Fairy Qu.
That wretched world he 'gan for to abhor,
And mortal life 'gan loath, as thing forlore.
Fairy Queen.

Thus fell the trees, with noise the deserts roar;
The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forlore.
Fairfax.

FORLORN. adj. [forlonen, from forleopen,
Saxon; verloren, Dutch.]

1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they wont to scorn;
Of fortune and of hope at once forlorn. Hubberd.
Tell me, good Hobinol, what gars thee greet?
What? hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorn? Spenser.

In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forlorn.
Knolles's History.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forlorn! Milton.

Their way
Lies through the perplex'd paths of this drear wood;
The nodding horror of whose shady brows,
Threat the forlorn and wand'ring passenger. Milton.
My only strength and stay! forlorn of thee,
Whither shall I betake me, where subsist! Milton.
Like a declining statesman, left forlorn
To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Denham.
The good old man, forlorn of human aid,
For vengeance to his heavenly patron pray'd.
Dryden.

Philomel laments forlorn.
As some sad turtle his lost love deplores,
Thus, far from Delia, in the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, unpity'd, and forlorn. Pope.

2. Taken away. This sense shews that it is the participle of an active verb, now lost.

When

When as night hath us of light forlorn,
I wish that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.
What is become of great Acrates' son!
Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,
That hath so many haughty conquests won?
Is all his force forlorn, and all his Glory done?
Fairy Queen.

3. Small; despicable; in a ludicrous sense.
He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick fight were invincible. Shakefp. Henry IV.

FORLO'RN. n. f.

1. A lost, solitary, forsaken man,
Henry
Is of a king become a banish'd man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn. Shakefp.

2. FORLORN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed to perish.

Criticks in plume,
Who lolling on our foremost benches sit,
And still charge first, the true forlorn of wit. Dryd.

FORLO'RNNESS. n. f. [from forlorn.] Destitution; misery; solitude.

Men displeased God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they compleated the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

To FORLY'E, v. n. [from fore and lye.] To lye before.

Knit with a golden baldric, which forlay
Athwart her snowy breast, and did divide
Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,
Now little 'gan to swell; and being ty'd
Through her thin weed, their places only signify'd.
Fa. Qu.

FORM. n. f. [forma, Latin; forme, Fr.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too,
—Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms. Shak.
It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Jub.

Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form.
Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grift. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They turn to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shakespeare's H. VIII.
Here toils and death, and death's half-brother,
Sleep,

Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep;
With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind. Dryd.

3. Particular model or modification.

He that will look into many parts of Asia and America will find men reason there perhaps as acutely as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.

He hath no form nor comeliness. Isa. liii. 2.

5. Regularity; method; order.

What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.

Then those whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause.
Dryden.

They were young heirs sent only for form from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rites.

Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
Shall do a court'sy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakefp. King Lear.

A long table, and a square table, or a seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the counsellors opinions that sit lower. Bacon's Essays.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caused a particular act to pass, that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Davies.

Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms. Clarend.
How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of form, or love?

A Phil. Dist. Metb.

8. Stated method; established practice; ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all.
Hooker.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden.

9. A long seat.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Watts.

I was seen with her in the manorhouse, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakefp.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden.

11. The seat or bed of a hare.

Now for a clod like hare in form thy peer:
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do move;
Now the ambitious lark, with mirror clear,
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love.
Sidney.

Have you observ'd a fitting hare,
Lift'ning, and fearful of the storm
Of horns and hounds, clap back her ear, Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form did adjoin itself. Hooker.

13. A formal cause; that which gives essence.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe.
Bacon's Natural History.

To FORM. v. a. [formo, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials.

God formed man of the dust of the ground.
Gen. ii. 7.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought
Fusil, or graven in metal. Milton.

Determin'd to advance into our room
A creature form'd of earth. Milton.

She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air. Pope.

2. To model to a particular shape or state.

Creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to fight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet. Milton.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while she to life was form'd.
Milton.

3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.

Lucretius taught him not to form his heroes, to give him piety or valour for his manners. Dryden.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner: as, he formed his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.

Our differences with the Romanists are thus formed into an interest, and become the design not of single persons, but of corporations and successions.
Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.

The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions formed for promoting it. Decay of Piety.

He dies too soon;
And fate, if possible, must be delay'd:
The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time.
Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.

Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And seem to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryd.

FORMAL. adj. [formel, French; formalis,
Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.

The justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances
And so he plays his part. Shakefp. As you like It.

Formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance surely like a father.
Shakespeare.

Ceremonies be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exalting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Bacon.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pirates. Bacon.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st where it concerns me most. Dryd.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice:
the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

Bellarmine agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal
he

he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillington.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristic; regular; proper.

Thou shou'dst come like a fury cover'd with snakes, Not like a formal man. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

I will not let him stir,
'Till I have us'd th' approved means I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again. Shaksp.

FO'RMALIST. n. f. [formaliste, French; from form.] One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgment, to see what shifts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficies to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon.

A grave, staunch, skilfully managed face, set upon a grasping aspiring mind, having got many a fly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South.

FORMALITY. n. f. [formalité, French; from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estr.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The barefaced perjury, and fix the shame. Dryden.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all fat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the imposture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glanville's Scepis.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A. and B. that he will give a hundred pounds to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillington.

FO'RMALIZE. v. a. [formaliser, French; from formal.]

1. To model; to modify. A word not now in use.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth so formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were to many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

FO'RMALLY. adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies or rites.

Formally according to our law,
Depose him. Shakspere's Richard II.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally received, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier on Pride.

Vol. I.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorised guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the Image of God, but only a part of it. South.

The Heathens and the Christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a Christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Smalridge.

FORMATION. n. f. [formation, French; from formo; Lat.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of vulcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus. Arbutnot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offered to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown.

FO'RMATIVE. adj. [from formo, Latin.]

Having the power of giving form; plastick.

As we have established our assertion of the seminal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed, by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermons.

FO'RMER. n. f. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray on the Creation.

FO'RMER. adj. [from forma, Saxon, first;

whence former, and formost, now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Foremost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which he saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time,

Thy air,

Thou other gold bound brow, is like the first:
—A third is like the former. Shaksp. Macbeth.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past; as this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou hast,
The future doubtful, and the former past. Harte.

FO'RMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retirements of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their Summer. Addison.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal salts, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbutnot.

FO'RMIDABLE. adj. [formidabilis, Latin; formidable, French.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind.

Dryden's Dedication.

They seem'd to fear the formidable fight,
And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryd.

FO'RMIDABLENESS. n. f. [from formidable.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shewed the formidableness of their danger, than by a blind embracing it, to perish. Decay of Piety.

FO'RMIDABLY. adv. [from formidable.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FO'RMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; without regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shaksp.

FO'RMULARY. n. f. [formulaire, French; from formule.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.

FO'RMULARY. adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.

FO'RMULE. n. f. [formule, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.

FO'RNICATE. v. a. [from fornix, Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Brown.

FORNICATION. n. f. [fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door. Shaksp.

The law ought to be strict against fornications and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In Scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou did'st trust in thine own beauty, thou play'd'st the harlot, because of thy renown, and pour'dst out thy fornications on every one that pass'd by. Ezek. xvi. 15.

FORNICA'TOR. n. f. [fornicateur, French; from fornix, Lat.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul, as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Taylor.

FORNICA'TRESS. n. f. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd;
Lether have needful but not slavish means. Shaksp.

FO'RSA'KE. v. a. preter. forsook; part. pass. forsook, or forsaken. [versaken, Dut.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsook,
God Sayl; the room in's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time

To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace;
Prevent his falsehood, and forsake him first:
I know you hate him. A. Philips's Distress Mother.
Daughter of Jove, whose arms in thunder wield
Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield,
Forsook by thee, in vain I sought thy aid. Pope.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state,
Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryd.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their places took. Dryd.
When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,
Forsaken of all sight she left the shore. Dryden.

Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsaken,
And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more. Rowe.

FO'RSA'KER. n. f. [from forfake.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forfakers of God. Apocrypha.
FORSOOTH. adv. [fornōðe, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lyfander
 Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
 And tender me, forsooth, affection! Shakespeare.

A fit man forsooth to govern a realm, who had so goodly government in his own estate. Mayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French.
Holder on Speech.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord.
Addison's Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown. Arbutb. Hist. of John Bull.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that flumen orationis that Cicero speaks of. Baker.

2. It is supposed once to have been a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the word yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakespeare to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian.

TO FORSWEAR. v. n. pret. forfswore :
 part forfsworn. [fornfswænan, Saxon.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow
 Never to woo: her more; but do forfswear her,
 As one unworthy all the former favours
 That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shakespeare.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that self chain about his neck,
 Which he forfswore most monstrously to have. Shak.
 Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
 How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look I Like innocence, and as serenely bold
 As truth, how loudly he forfswears thy gold!
Dryd. Juv.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to for-swear himself to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forfsworn?
 To leave fair Sylvia, shall I be forfsworn?
 To wrong my friend, shall I be much forfsworn?
 And ev'n that power which gave me hurt my oath,
 Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shakespeare.
 One says, he never should endure the sight
 Of that forfsworn, that wrongs both lands and laws.
Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
 Eternal love and endless faith to Theseus;
 And yet I'm false, forfsworn: the hallow'd shrine,
 That heard me swear, is witness to my falshood.
Smith.

TO FORSWEAR. v. n. To swear falsely;
 to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,
 To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
 —And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,
 For false forfswearing, and for murder too. Shakespeare.

FORSWEARER. n. s. [from forfswear.] One who is perjured.

FORT. n. s. [fort, French.] A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they called the fort de Por; and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest. Bacon.

Now to their fort they are about to send
 For the loud engines which their isle defend. Waller.
 He that views a fort to take it.

Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part, Donham.
 My fury does, like jealous forts pursue
 With death ev'n strangers who but come to view.
Dryden.

FOR'TED. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts. Not used now.

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
 To lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
 When it deserves with characters of brass
 A forted residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
 And rasure of oblivion. Shak. Measure for Measure.

FORTH. adv. [fornð, Saxon; whence further and furthest.]

1. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
 From that day forth I cast in careful mind
 To seek her out. Fairy Queen.

2. Forward in place or order.

Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner.
Whitgift.

Mad Pandarus steps forth, with vengeance vow'd
 For Bitias' death. Dryden's Æn.

3. Abroad; out of doors.

Uncle, I must come forth. Shakespeare. Othello.
 I have no mind of seating forth to-night. Shakespeare.
 Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?
 Will she not forth? Shakespeare.
 When Winter past, and Summer scarce begun,
 Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dryden.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also risk to draw the enemy privily upon them. Spenser.

Ev'n that sunshine brew'd a slow'r for him,
 That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France.
Shakespeare.

5. Out into a public character; publick view.
 You may set forth the same with farmhouses.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
 Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
 To fierce contention gave a prosp'rous end, Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end.
 Out of use,

You, cousin,
 Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
 Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shakespeare.

7. To a certain degree. Obsolete.

Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no further than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hammond.

8. On to the end. Out of use.

I repeated the Ave-Maria: the inquisitor bad me say forth; I said I was taught no more.
Memoir in Scrype.

FORTH. prep. Out of.

And here's a prophet, that I brought with me
 From forth the streets of Pomfret. Shakespeare.

Some forth their cabbins peep,
 And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
 As jealous husbands, what they would not know.
Donne.

FORTHCOMING. adj. [forth and coming.]
 Ready to appear; not absconding; not lost.

Carry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming. Shak. Taming of a Shrew.
 We'll see your trinkets here forthcoming all.
Shakespeare. Henry VI.

FORTHISSUING. adj. [forth and issue.]

 covert.

Fortissuing thus, she gave him first to wield
 A weighty axe, with truest temper steel'd,
 And double edg'd. Pope's Odyssey.

FORTHRIGHT. adv. [forth and right.]

Straight forward; without flexions. Not in use.

He ever going so just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seemed as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind. Sidney.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a delight to play with itself. Sidney.

Arrived there, they passed in forthright;

For still to all the gate stood open wide. Fairy Queen.

Thither forthright he rode to rouse the prey. Dry.

FORTHRIGHT. n. s. A straight path.

Here's a maze trod, indeed,
 Through forthrights and meanders. Shak. Tempest.

FORTHWITH. adv. [forth and with,] Immediately; without delay; at once; straight.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
 Unto his guest; who, after troublous fights
 And dreams, 'gan now to take more sound repast.
Spenser.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker.

Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire. Davies on Ireland.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
 The notes of wrath, the musick brought from hell,
 The rattling drums. Daniel's Civil War.

The winged heralds, by command
 Of sov'reign pow'r throughout the host proclaim
 A solemn council forthwith to be held At Pandæmonium. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived. South.

FO'RTIETH. adj. [from forty.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirty-ninth.

What doth it avail
 To be the fortieth man in an entail? Donne.

Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from thence, not the forty thousandth part. Swift.

FO'RTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. s. [fortification, French;
 from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary.
Harris.

The Phœnicians, though an unwarlike nation, yet understood the art of fortification. Broome.

2. A place built for strength.

The hounds were uncoupled, and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgements, might dispense some advantage.
Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used.

To strengthen the infested parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote.
Government of the Tongue.

FO'TIFIER. n. s. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity offered by the ground. Carew.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had

FOR

FOR

had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

TO FORTIFY. v. a. [fortifier, French.]

1. To strengthen again attacks by walls or works.
Great Dunstan he strongly fortifies. Shakespeare.
He fortified the city against besieging. Eccles. l. 4.
2. To confirm; to encourage.
It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney.
To fortify the former opinions Tostatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned. Raleigh.
3. To fix; to establish in resolution.
But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her softer soul:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.
A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

TO FORTIFY. v. n. To raise strong places.
Thou us impower'd
To fortify thus far and overlay
With this portentous bridge the dark abyss. Milton.

FORTILAGE. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort; a blockhouse.
Yet was the fence thereof but weak and thin
Nought fear'd their force that fortilage to win. Spenser.

In all straits and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which would keep and command the straight. Spenser.

FORTIN. n. s. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege. Hauwer.

Thou hast talk'd
Of Palisadoes, fortins, parapets. Shakespeare.

FORTITUDE. n. s. [fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.
The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The better fortitude
Of patience, and heroic martyrdom Unfing. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.
They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward. Nelson.
2. Strength; force. Not in use.
He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of Hell! Shakespeare.

FORTLET. n. s. [from fort.] A little fort.

FORTNIGHT. n. s. [contracted from fourteen nights, peoppezyne nighz, Saxon. It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights; thus we say, this day seven-night. So Tacitus, Non dierum numerum, ut nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.
She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fort-night. Sidney.
Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnight's space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon.
About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.
He often had it in his head but never, with much apprehension, till about a fortnight before. Swift.

FORTRESS. n. s. [fortresse, French.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest he over-ran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses. Spenser on Ireland.

The trump of death sounds in their hearing shrill;
Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave. Fairfax.

God is our fortress, in whose conqu'ring name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Shakespeare.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [fortuit, French; fortuitus, Lat.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.
A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms. Ray.
If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring. Blackmore.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.] Accidentally; casually; by chance.
It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.

FORTUITOUSNESS. n. s. [from fortuitous.] Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.
I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you: you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryden.
No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:
True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes them look aside, and so their footing
miss. Dryden.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; successfully.
Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And beldly wist, and fortunately great. Prior.

FORTUNATENESS. n. s. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.
O me, said she, whose greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sisters greatest unfortunateness. Sidney.

FORTUNE. n. s. [fortuna, Latin; fortune, French.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.
Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to the poor. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel. Shakespeare.
2. The good or ill that befalls man.
Rejoice, said he, to-day
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Among so brave a people you are they Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize. Dryden.
The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.
3. The chance of life; means of living.
His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.
4. Success, good or bad; event.

No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;
Our equal crimes, shall equal fortune give. Dryden.

5. Estate; possessions.
If thou do'st,
And this instructs thee, thou do'st make thy way
To noble fortunes. Shakespeare's King Lear.
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shakespeare's King Lear.
But tell me, Tityrus, what heav'nly power
Preserv'd your fortunes in that fatal hour? Dryden.
The fate which governs poets, thought it fit
He should not raise his fortunes by his wit. Dryden.
He was younger son to a gentleman of a good hirth, but small fortune. Swift.

6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.
I am thought some heiress rich in lands,
Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing. Prolog. to Cyprian.
The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view. Speilator.
When miss delights in her spinnet,
A silder may a fortune get. Swift.

7. Futurity; future events.
You who men's fortunes in their faces read,
To find out mine, look not, alas, on me:
But mark her face, and all the features heed;
For only there is writ my destiny. Cowley's Mistress.

TO FORTUNE. v. n. [from the noun.] To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.
It fortuned, as fair it then befall
Behind his back, unweeting, where he stood,
Of ancient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood. Fairy Queen.
It fortuned, the same night that a Christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning. Kneller.
I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortun'd. Shakespeare.
Here fortun'd Curl to slide. Pope's Dunciad.

Not th' imperious Iheu
Of the full fortuned Caesar ever shall Be brook'd with me. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

FORTUNEBOOK. n. s. [fortune and book.] A book consulted to know fortune or future events.
Thou know'st a face, in whose each look Beauty lays open love's fortunebook;
On whose fair revolutions wait
The obsequious motions of love's fate. Crashaw.

FORTUNEHUNTER. n. s. [fortune and hunt.] A man whose employment is to enquire after women with great portions, to enrich himself by marrying them.
We must, however, distinguish between fortune-hunters and fortune-stealers. Speilator.

TO FORTUNETELL. v. n. [fortune and tell.] To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.
We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling. Shakespeare.
I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you. Shakespeare.
The gypsies were to divide the money got by fortunetelling. Walton's Angler.

2. To reveal futurity.
Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortunetelling lines. Cleveland.

FORTUNETELLER. n. s. [fortune and teller.] One who cheats common people, by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.
They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shakespeare.
A Welchman being at a fellows-house, and seeing 5 K 2 the

the prisoners hold up their hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers; for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret thing by lot? Duppa's rules for Devotion.

There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other, to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange.

Long ago a fortuneteller

Exactly said what now befell her. Swift.

FORTY. adj. [peopenzig, Saxon.] Four times ten.

On fair ground I could beat forty of them. Shakes.

But when the alien compost is exhaust,

Its naive poverty again prevails! Phillips.

FOSTERER. n. s. [from foster.] A nurse;

one who gives food in the place of a parent.

In Ireland they put their children to fosterers;

the rich men selling, the meaner sort buying the alterage of their children: in the opinion of the Irish, fostering has always been a stronger alliance than blood. Davies on Ireland.

FOSTERFATHER. n. s. [forstenfader, Saxon.]

One who gives food in the place of the father.

In Ireland fosterchildren do love and are beloved by their fosterfathers, and their sept, more than of their own natural parents and kindred. Davies.

The Duke of Bretagne having been an host and a kind of parent or fosterfather to the king, in his tenderness of age and weakness of fortune, did look for aid this time from King Henry. Bacon.

Th' other half did woman's shape retain,
Most loathsome, filthy, foul, and full of vile dildain.
Fairy Queen.

Hast thou forgot
The foul witch Sycorax, who with age and envy
Was grown into a hoop? Shakefp. Tempest.

Foul fights do rather displease, in that they excite the memory of foul things than in the immediate objects; and therefore, in pictures, those foul fights do not much offend. Bacon.

All things that seem so foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively. More.

6. Disgraceful; shameful.

Too well I see and rue the dire event,
That with sad overthrow and foul defeat
Hath lost us heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FRANKPLEDGE. n. f. [franciplegium, Latin;]

of franc, i. e. liber & pleige, i. e. fidei jussor.] A pledge or surety for freemen.

For the ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the publick peace, was, that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights, and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one decennary or other; this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus franciplegii, view of frankpledge. Corwel.

Free'd and enfranchis'd; not a party to
The anger of the king, guilty of,
If any be, the trespass of the queen. Shakesp.
He recovered the temple, free'd the city, and upheld the laws which were going down. 2 Mac. ii. 22.
Can't thou no other master understand,
Than him that free'd thee by the pretor's wand?
Dryden.

Should thy coward tongue
Spread its cold poison through the martial throng,
My jav'lin shall revenge so base a part,
And free the soul that quivers in thy heart. Pope.
2. To rid from; to clear from any thing ill: with of or from.

It is no marvel, that he could think of no better way to be free'd of these inconveniences the passions of those meetings gave him, than to dissolve them.
Clarendon.

Hercules
Free'd Erymanthus from the foaming boar. Dryden.
Our land is from the rage of tygers free'd. Dryd.
3. To clear from impediments or obstructions.

The chaste Sibylla shall your steps convey,
And blood of offer'd victims free the way. Dryden.
Fierce was the fight; but hast'ning to his prey,
By force the furious lover free'd his way. Dryden.
This master-key
Frees every lock, and leads us to his person. Dryd.
4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in use.

We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our feasts and banquets bloody knives.
Shakesp.
Never any sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep. Daniel.
5. To exempt.

For he that is dead is free'd from sin. Rom. vi. 7.
FREEBO'OTER. n. f. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.
Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consisted mostly of base people and freebooters, fitter to spoil a coast than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.

The Earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or such freebooters as sailed under their commission, taken all the feamen.
Clarendon.

FREEBO'OTING. n. f. Robbery; plunder;
the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handsomely in his way; and when he goeth abroad in the night on freebooting, it is his best and surest friend. Spenser.

FREEBORN. adj. [free and born.] Not a slave; inheriting liberty.

O baseness, to support a tyrant's throne,
And crush your freeborn brethren of the world!
Dryden.

I shall speak my thoughts like a freeborn subject, such thing perhaps as no Dutch commentator could,
and I am sure no Frenchman durst. Dryden.

Shall freeborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from consent and custom draw,
The same right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign?
Dryden.

FREECHA'PPEL. n. f. [free and chappel.]
Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the jurisdiction of the ordinary. The king may also license a subject to found such a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's visitation. Cowel.

FREECOST. n. f. [free and cost.] Without expence; free from charges.

We must not vouch any man for an exact master in the rules of our modern policy, but such a one as has brought himself so far to hate and despise the absurdity of being kind upon freecost, as not so much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing.
South.

FREE

FREEDMAN. n. f. [freed and man.] A slave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jostles, and will be prefer'd;
First come, first serv'd, he cries. Dryden's Jav.

FREEDOM. n. f. [from free.]

1. Liberty; exemption from servitude; independence.

The laws themselves they do specially rage at, as most repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom.
Spenser on Ireland.

O freedom! first delight of human kind!
Not that which bondmen from their masters find,
The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inscribe
Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe:
That false enfranchisement with ease is found;
Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our holy sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shak.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince first gave freedom to servants, so as to become citizens of equal privileges with the rest, which very much increased the power of the people.
Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, necessity, or pre-determination.

I else must change
Their nature, and revoke the high decree
Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd
Their freedom; they themselves ordain'd their fall.
Milton.

In every sin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by so much is the act the more sinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is so much as higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act.
South.

5. Unrestraint.

I will that all the feasts and sabbaths shall be all days of immunity, and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Mac. x.

6. The state of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their state lays them under a greater necessity of always chusing and doing the best things. Law.

7. Ease or facility in doing or showing any thing.

FREEBO'TED. adj. [free and foot.] Not restrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear,
Which now goes too freebooted. Shakesp. Hamlet.

FREEHE'ARTED. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unrestrained.

Love must freehearted be, and voluntary;
And not incanted, or by fate constrain'd. Davies.

FREEHOLD. n. f. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holdeth in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life. Freehold in deed is the real possession of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life.
Freehold in law is the right that a man has to such land or tenements before his entry or seizure. Freehold is sometimes taken in opposition to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or folcland, that is, holden, without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better sort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being such as we now call freehold.
The latter was commonly in the possession of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowel.

No alienation of lands holden in chief should be available, touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record.

FREE

Bacon's Office of Alienation.
There is an unspeakable pleasure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and snow, will make the owner pleased in the possession, and stout in the defence of it. Addison.
My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I should be glad to possess a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give consent. Swift.

FREEHOLD. n. f. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did banish the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; so the law did banish the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FREE'LY. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vassalage; without slavery; without dependence.

2. Without restraint; heartily; with full gust.

If my son were my husband, I would freelier rejoice in that absence wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would show most love. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Plentifully; lavishly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains
I have bestow'd to breed this present peace,
You would drink freely. Shakesp. Henry IV.

4. Without scruple; without reserve.

Let such teach others who themselves excel,
And censure freely who have written well. Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Afcham.

The path to peace is virtue: what I show,
Thyself may freely on thyself bestow:
Fortune was never worshipp'd by the wife;
But set aloft by fools, usurps the skies. Dryden.

6. Without necessity; without predetermi-nation.

Freely they stood who stood, and fell who fell.
Milton.

He leaves us to chuse with the liberty of reasonable beings: they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do also freely reject it. Rogers.

7. Frankly; liberally; without cost.

By nature all things have an equally uncommon use: nature freely and indifferently opens the bosoms of the universe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneously; of its own accord.

FREEMAN. n. f. [free and man.]

1. One not a slave; not a vassal.

Had you rather Cæsar were living, and die all slaves, than that Cæsar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakespeare.

If to break loose from the conduct of reason, and to want that restraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chusing or doing the worst, be liberty, true liberty, madmen and fools are the only freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent,
What nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.
What this union was is expressed in the preceding verse, by their both having been made freemen on the same day. Addison.

FREEMINDED. adj. [free and mind.] Un-perplexed; without load of care.

To be freeminded, and cheerfully disposed at hours of meat, sleep, and exercise, is one of the best precepts of long lasting. Bacon's

FREE'NESS. n. f. [from free.]

1. The state or quality of being free.

2. Openness; unreservedness; ingenuouf-ness; candour.

FREE

The reader may pardon it, if he please, for the freeness of the confession. Dryden.

3. Generosity; liberality.

I hope it will never be said that the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, shall in their corporations exceed the clergy itself, and their sons, in freeness of giving. Spratt.

FREESCHOOL. n. s. [free and school.] A school in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, provision was made by another law, that there should be one free-school at least erected in every diocese. Davies.

Two clergymen stood candidates for a small free-school; a gentleman who happened to have a better understanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better scholar. Swift.

FREESPOKEN: adj. [free and spoken.] Accustomed to speak without reserve.

Nerva one night supped privately with some six or seven; amongst whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courses as Marcellus and Regulus had done: the Emperor fell into discourse of the injustice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accusers; and said, what should we do with them, if we had them now? One of them that was at supper, and was a freespoken senator, said, Marry, they should sup with us. Bacon.

FREESTONE. n. s. [free and stone.] Stone commonly used in building.

Freestone is so named from its being of such a constitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I saw her hand; she has a leathern hand, a freestone-coloured hand. Shakefp. As you like it.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Addison on Italy.

FREETHINKER. n. s. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.

Atheist is an old fashioned word: I'm a freethinker, child. Addison.

Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against Christianity? And therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabrick must fall to the ground. Swift.

FREEWILL. n. s. [free and will.]

1. The power of directing our own actions without restraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.

I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezra, vii. 13.

FREWO'MAN. n. s. [free and woman.] A woman not enslaved.

All her ornaments are taken away; of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. 1 Mac. ii. 11.

TO FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [vriesen, Dutch.]

1. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Orpheus with his lute made trees And mountain tops, that freeze, Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakefp.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakefp.

FREE

Heav'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal, And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryden.

TO FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

2. To kill by cold.

When we both lay in the field, Frozen almost to death, how did he lap me, Ev'n in his garments! Shakefp. Richard III. My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shakespeare.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins, That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shakefp. Death came on amain And exercis'd below his iron reign; Then upward to the seat of life he goes; Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

TO FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. fraught; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes Have to the port of Athens sent their ships, Fraught with the ministers and instruments Of cruel war. Shakefp. Troilus and Cressida, Prol. Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these, Who freights a ship to venture on the seas; With one frail interposing plank to save From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryd. Freighted with iron, from my native land I steer my voyage. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To load as the burthen; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and The freighting souls within her. Shakefp.

FREIGHT. n. s.

1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight; The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTER. n. s. [fretteur, French.] He who freights a vessel.

FREN. n. s. A stranger. An old word wholly forgotten here; but retained in Scotland. Beattie.

But now from me his madding mind is start, And woos the widow's daughter of the glen; And now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart, So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser.

FRENCH CHALK. n. s.

French chalk is an indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.

French chalk is unctuous to the touch, as steatites is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Wood.

TO FRENCHIFY. v. a. [from French.] To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.

They disliked nothing more in King Edward the Confessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden's Remains.

Has he familiarly disliked Your yellow starch, or said your doublet Was not exactly Frenchified? Shakefp.

FRENETICK. adj. [frenetique, French; phreneticus; generally therefore written phrenetick.] Mad; distracted.

He himself impotent, By mean of his frenetick malady. Daniel.

FRENZY. n. s. [phrenitis; phrenitis, Latin:

FREE

whence phrenetify, phrenetify, phrenzy, or frenzy.] Madness; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.

That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy. Shakefp.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits, That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides; All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Addison.

Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy; this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bent.

FREQUENCY. n. s. [frequency, French; frequentia, Latin.] Crowd; concourse; assembly.

The frequency of degree, From high to low throughout. Shakefp. Timon.

He, in full frequency bright Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Milton.

FREQUENCY. n. s. [frequentia, Latin.]

1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally intitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle: its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Atterbury.

2. Concourse; full assembly.

Thou cam'st ere while into this senate: who Of such a frequency, so many friends And kindred thou hast here, saluted thee? Ben Jonf.

FREQUENT. adj. [frequent, French; frequens, Latin.]

1. Often done; often seen; often occurring.

The frequent these times are, the better. Duty of Man.

An ancient and imperial city falls; The streets are fill'd with frequent funerals. Dryden. Frequent herbes shall besiege your gates. Pope.

2. Used often to practise any thing.

The Christians of the first times were generally frequent in the practise of it. Duty of Man.

Every man thinks he may pretend to any employment, provided he has been loud and frequent in declaring himself hearty for the government. Swift.

3. Full of concourse.

Frequent and full. Milton.

TO FREQUENT. v. a. [frequent, Latin; frequenter, French.] To visit often; to be much in any place; to resort often to.

They in latter day,

Finding in it fit ports for fishers trade, 'Can more the same frequent, and further to invade. Spenser.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto: our Saviour himself and the Apostles frequented them. Hooker.

This fellow here, this thy creature, By night frequent my house. Shakefp. Timon.

At that time this land was known and frequented by the ships and vessels. Bacon.

With tears

Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent; And there what I before digested, vent. Denham.

That he frequented the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted. Dryden.

FREQUENTABLE. adj. [from frequent.]

Conversable; accessible. A word not now used, but not inelegant.

While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous. Sidney.

FREQUENTATIVE. adj. [frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FREQUENTER.

F R E

FREQUENTER. n. f. [from frequent.] One who often resorts to any place.

Persons under bad imputations are no great frequenters of churches. Swift.

FREQUENTLY. adv. [frequenter, Latin.] Often; commonly; not rarely; not seldom; a considerable number of times; manifold times.

I could not without much grief; observe how frequently both gentlemen and ladies are at a loss for questions and answers. Swift.

FRESCO. n. f. [Italian.]

1. Coolness; shade; duskiness, like that of the evening or morning.

Love more the fresco of the nights. Prior.

2. A picture not drawn in glaring light, but in dusk.

Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye;
A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.

FRESH. adj. [frere, Saxon; fraische, Fr.]

1. Cool; not vapid with heat.

I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast;
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring,
And draw thy water from the freshet spring. Prior.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixed with the salt water;
so that, a very great way within the sea, men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land.
Abbot's Desc. of the World.

3. New; not had before.

No borrowed bays his temples did adorn,
But to our crown he did fresh jewels bring. Dryden.

4. New; not impaired by time.

This second source of men, while yet but few,
And while the dread of judgment still remains
Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what is just and right,
Shall lead their lives. Milton's Paradise Lost.

That love which first was set, will first decay;
Mine of a freshet date will longer stay. Dryden.

5. In a state like that of recentness.

We will revive those times, and in our memories
Preserve and still keep fresh, like flowers in waters.
Denham.

With such a care
As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew. Waller.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!
And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay! Milt.

Think not, 'cause men flatter ring say,
Y'are fresh as April, sweet as May,
Bright as is the morning star,
That you are so. Carew.

6. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the spirits Palinurus press'd;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest. Dryden.
Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;
Stiff in denial, as the law appoints,
On engines they distend their tortur'd joints. Dryd.

7. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Nor lies she long; but as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

8. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; unfaded; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him;
take order that when he is dead there be chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threescore.
Bacon's Holy War.

Two swains
Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair. Pope.

9. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me
Hast thou beheld a freshet gentlewoman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks? Shakespeare.

It is no rare observation in England to see a fresh coloured lusty young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to her grave. Harvey on Consumptions.

F R E

They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen. Addison.

As a fresh gale of wind fills the sails of a ship.
Holder.

11. Fasting: opposed to eating or drinking.

A low word.

12. Sweet: opposed to stale or stinking.

FRESH. n. f. Water not salt.

He shall drink nought but brine; for I'll not shew him

Where the quick freshes are. Shakesp. Tempest.

To FRESHEN. v. a. [from fresh.] To make fresh.

Preclusive drops let all their moisture flow
In large effusion o'er the freshen'd world. Thomson.

To FRESHEN. v. n. To grow fresh.

A freshening breeze the magick power supply'd,
While the wing'd vessel flew along the tide. Pope.

FRESHET. n. f. [from fresh.] A pool of fresh water.

All fish from sea or shore,
Freshet or purling brook, or shell or lin. Milton.

FRESHLY. adv. [from fresh.]

1. Coolly.

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of heresy being grown unto such ripeness as that was, do, even in the very cutting down, scatter oftentimes those seeds which for a while lie unseen and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first.
Hooker.

Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd. Shak.

They are now freshly in difference with them.
Bacon.

3. With a healthy look; ruddily.

Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled?
Shakesp.

FRESHNESS. n. f. [from fresh.]

1. Newness; vigour; spirit; the contrary to vapidness.

Most odours smell best broken or crushed; but flowers pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness and sweetness of their odour. Bacon.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not staleness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind; for surely no man was ever weary of thinking, that he had done well or virtuously. South.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men. Hayward.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of Summer; but they be but pennings of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them reverberate in circles. Bacon.

Say, if she please, she hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air. Dryden.

She laid her down to rest,
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air. Addison.

5. Ruddiness; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating stains;
Her cheeks their freshness lose and wonted grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face. Granville.

6. Freedom from saltiness.

FRESHWATER. [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.] Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatise those who come first to sea as freshwater men, or novices.

Those nobility, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks. Knolles.

F R E

FRET. n. f. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from precan, to eat; others from prezpan, to adorn; some from Qeirro; Skinner more probably from fremo, or the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores. Brown.

2. Any agitation of liquours by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

Of this river the surface is covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage.
Addison on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret dischargeth itself of heterogeneous mixtures. Derham.

3. That stop of the musical-instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note; and, in the tops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.

The harp
Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice Choral or unison. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They are fitted to answer the most valuable harmony: two or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute.
Grew's Cosmolog. Sac.

4. Work rising in protuberances.

The frets of houses, and all equal figures, please;
whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon.
We take delight in a prospect well laid out, and diversified with fields and meadows, woods and rivers, in the curious fret works of rocks and grottos.
Spectator.

5. Agitation of the mind; commotion of temper; passion.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another chase, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbert.

The incredulous Pheac, having yet Drank but one round, reply'd in sober fret. Tate.

You, too weak, the slightest loss to bear,
Are on the fret of passion, boil and rage. Creech.

Yet then did Deunis rave in furious fret:
I never answer'd, I was not in debt. Pope.

To FRET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To agitate violently by external impulse or action.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise
When they are fretted with the gulls of heav'n.
Shakespeare.

2. To wear away by rubbing.

Drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth. Shakesp. Richard II.

In the banks of rivers, with the washing of the water, there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold. Abbot.

Before I ground the object metal on the pitch, I always ground the putty on it with the concave copper,
'till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the putty were not made to stick fast in the pitch, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes.
Newton's Opticks.

3. To hurt by attrition.

Antony
Is valiant and dejected; and, by starts,
His fretted fortunes gave him hope and fear
Of what he has and has not. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

4. To corrode; to eat away.

It is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without. Lev. xiii. 55.

Corrice or freeze, with bossy sculpturesgrav'n;
The roof was fretted gold. Milton's Paradise Lost.
6. To variegate; to diversify.
Yon grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day. Shak.
7. To make angry; to vex.
The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast; and they that over-ween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and truth. Milton.
Because thou hast fretted me in all these things,
Behold I will recompence thy way upon thine head.
Exek. xvi. 43.
Such an expectation, cries one, will never come to pass: therefore I'll even give it up, and go and fret myself. Collier.
Injuries from friends fret and gall more, and the memory of them is not so easily obliterated. Arbutn.
- TO FRET. v. n.
1. To be in commotion; to be agitated.
No benefits whatsoever shall ever alter or allay that diabolical rancour that frets and ferments in some hellish breasts, but that it will foam out in slander and invective. South.
Th' adjoining brook, that purls along,
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Now scarcely moving through a reedy pool. Tboms.
2. To be worn away; to be corroded.
Take a piece of gloves leather that is very thin, and put your gold therein, with sal armoniack, binding it close, and then hang it up: the sal armoniack will fret away, and the gold remain behind. Peach.
3. To make way by attrition or corrosion.
These do but indeed scrape off the exuberances, or fret into the wood, and therefore they are very feldom used to soft wood. Moxon.
It inflamed and swelled very much; many wheals arose, and fretted one into another with great exco-riation. Wifeman.
4. To be angry; to be peevish; to vex

 2. A fragment; a small piece.
 Seefe and putter! have I lived to stand in the taunt of one that makes fritters of English!
Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
 If you strike a solid body that is brittle, as glass or sugar, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about into shivers, and fritters; the motion, upon the pressure, searching all ways, and breaking where it findeth the body weakest. Bacon's Natural History.
 The ancient errant knights
 Won all their ladies hearts in fights;
 And cut whole giants into fritters,
 To put them into amorous twitters. Hudibras.
 3. A cheescake; a wig. Ainsworth.
TO FRI'TTER. v. a. [from the noun.]
 1. To cut meat into small pieces to be fried.
 2. To break into small particles or fragments.
 Joy to great chaos! let division reign!
 My racks and tortures soon shall drive them hence,
 Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense. Dunciad.
 How prologues into prefaces decay,
 And these to notes are fritter'd quite away. Pope.
FRIVOLOUS. adj. [frivolus, Latin; frivole, French.] Slight; trifling; of no moment.
 It is frivolous to say we ought not to use bad ceremonies of the church of Rome, and presume all such bad as it pleaseth themselves to dislike. Hooker.
 These seem very frivolous and fruitless; for, by the breach of them, little damage can come to the commonwealth. Spenser.
 She tam'd the brinded lioness,
 And spotted mountain pard; but set at nought
 The frivolous bolt of Cupid. Milton.
 Those things which now seem frivolous and slight,
 Will be of serious consequence to you,
 When they have made you once ridiculous. Roscommon.
 All the impeachments in Greece and Rome agreed in a notion of being concerned, in point of honour, to condemn whatever person they impeached, however frivolous the articles, or however weak the proofs. Swift.
 I will not defend any mistake, and do not think myself obliged to answer every frivolous objection. Arbutnot.
FRIVOLOUSNESS. n. f. [from frivolous.]
 Want of importance; triflingness.
FRIVOLOUSLY. adv. [from frivolous.]

 Therein I spy'd this yellow frixled hair. Gay.
FRO. adv. [fria, Saxon.]
 1. Backward; regressively. It is only used in opposition to the word to; to and fro, backward and forward, to and from.
 The Carthaginians having spoiled all Spain, rooted out all that were affected to the Romans; and the Romans, having recovered that country, did cut off all that savoured the Carthaginians: so betwixt them both, to and fro, there was scarce a native Spaniard left. Spenser.
 As when a heap of gather'd thorns is cast,
 Now to, now fro, before th' autumnal blast,
 Together clung, it rolls around the field. Pope.
 2. It is a contraction of from: not now used.
 They turn round like grindlestones,
 Which they dig out fro' the delves,
 For their bairns bread, wives, and selves. Ben Jonson.
FROCK. n. f. [froc, French.]
 1. A dress; a coat.
 That monster, custom, is angel yet in this,
 That to the use of actions fair and good,
 He likewise gives a frock or livery,
 That aptly is put on. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

 the pancake is crisped or crimped in frying.] A kind of food made by frying bacon inclosed in a pancake.
FROLICK. adj. [wrolijk, Dutch.] Gay;
 full of levity; full of pranks.
 We fairies, that do run
 By the triple Hecate's team,
 From the presence of the sun,
 Following darkness like a dream,
 Now are frolick. Shakespeare.
 Whether, as some fages sing,
 The frolick wind that breathes the Spring,
 Zephyr with Aurora playing,
 As he met her once a Maying;
 There on beds of violets blue,
 And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,
 Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,
 So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire. Milton.
 Who ripe, and frolick of his full-grown age,
 Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields,
 At last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milton.
 The gay, the frolick, and the loud. Waller.
FRO'LICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A wild prank; a flight of whim and levity.
 He

- He would be at his frolick once again,
And his pretensions to divinity. Roscommon.
Alcibiades having been formerly noted for the like frolicks and excursions, was immediately accused of this. Swift.
While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er
Her frolicks, and pursues her tail no more. Swift.
TO FRO'LLICK. v. n. [from the noun.] To play wild pranks; to play tricks of levity and gaiety.
Manly spirit and genius plays not tricks with words, nor frolicks with the caprices of a frothy imagination. Glanville.
Then to her new love let her go,
And deck her in golden array;
Be finest at every fine show,
And frolick it all the long day. Rowe.
FRO'LLICKLY. adv. [from frolick.] Gaily;
wildly.
FRO'LLICKSOME. adj. [from frolick.] Full of wild gaiety.

Shak. Hen. V.
10. Out of; noting extraction.
From high Meonia's rocky shores I came,
Of poor descent; Acastes is my name. Addison.
11. Because of. Noting the reason or motive of an act or effect.
You are good, but from a nobler cause;
From your own knowledge, not from nature's laws.
Dryden.

- David celebrates the glory of God from the consideration of the greatness of his works. Tilloison.
We sicken soon from her contagious care;
Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair. Prior.
Relaxation from plenitude is cured by spare diet,
and from any cause by that which is contrary to it.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
12. Out of. Noting the ground or cause of any thing.
By the sacred radiance of the sun,
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakespeare.
They who believe that the praises which arise from valour are superiour to those which proceed from any other virtues, have not considered. Dryden.
What entertainment can be raised from so pitiful a machine? We see the success of the battle from the very beginning. Dryden.
'Tis true from force the strongest title springs,
I therefore hold from that which first made kings.
Dryden.
13. Not near to: noting distance.
His regiment lies half a mile at least
South from the mighty power of the king. Shak.
14. Noting separation or recession.
To die by thee, were but to die in jest;
From thee to die, were torture more than death. Shak.
Hast thou beheld when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart,
Rush to the race, and, panting, scarcely bear
Th' extremes of sev'rish hope and chilling fear.
Dryden, Virgil.
15. Noting exemption or deliverance.
From jealousy's tormenting strife,
For ever be thy bosom free'd. Prior.
16. Noting absence.
Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,
Of differences, which I best thought it fit
To answer from our home. Shakespeare, King Lear.

in the war of Flanders. Clarendon.
The milk of tygers was his infant food,
Taught from his tender years the taste of blood.
Dryden.
Were there, from all eternity, no memorable actions done 'till about that time? Tilloison.
19. Contrary to. Not in use.
Any thing so overdone is from the purpose of playing; whose end, both at the first and now, was and is to hold, as twere, the mirror up to nature.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Do not believe,
That from the sense of all civility,
I thus would play and trifle with your reverence.
Shakespeare.
Did you draw bonds to forfeit? Sign, to break?

Their train proceeding on their way,
From far the town and lofty tow'rs survey. Dryden.
27. FROM high.
Then heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high.
Dryden.
28. FROM thence. Here from is superfluous.
In the necessary differences which arise from thence, they rather break into several divisions than join in any one publick interest; and from hence have always risen the most dangerous factions, which have ruined the peace of nations. Clarendon.
29. FROM whence. From is here superfluous.
While future realms his wand'ring thoughts delight,
His daily vision and his dream by night,
Forbidden Thebes appears before his eye,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly. Pope.
30. FROM where.
From where high Ithaca o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'erarching shades and pendent woods,
Us to these shores our filial duty draws. Pope's Odyssey.
31. FROM without.

Of envy, discord, and of cruel deeds. Dryden's Æn.
Strong god of iron, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing north and hyperborean seas,
Terror is thine, and wild amazement, slung
From out thy chariot, wither ev'n the strong. Dryden.
40. FROM out of.
Whatever such principle there is, it was at the first

first found out by discubse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth. Hooker.

41. FROM under.

He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illuminated,
His fiery virtue rous'd
From under ashes into sudden flame. Milt. Agonistes.

42 FROM within.

From within
The broken bowels and the bloated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms. Dryden.

FROMWARD. prep. [from and ward, Saxon.]

Can you, when you have push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front his revenges with easy groans. Shakespeare.

Some are either to be won to the state in a soft and true manner, or fronted with some other of the same party that may oppose them, and so divide the reputation. Bacon's Essays.

I shall front thee, like some staring gholt,
With all my wrongs about me. Dryd. Don. Sebastian.

2. To stand opposed or overagainst any place or thing.

The square will be one of the most beautiful in Italy when this statue is erected, and a town-house built at one end to front the church that stands at the other. Addison on Italy.

To FRONT. v. n. To stand foremost.

I front but in that file,
Where others tell steps with me. Shak. Henry VIII.
FRONTAL. n. f. [frontale, Latin; frontal, French.] Any external form of medicine to be applied to the forehead, generally composed amongst the ancients of coolers and hypnoticks. Quincy.

We may apply intercipients upon the temples of mastick: frontales may also be applied. Wifeman.

The torpedo, alive, stupifies at a distance; but after death produceth no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium, and served as frontales in phrenies. Brown.

FRONTATED. adj. [from frons, Latin.]

In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line: used in opposition to cusped, which is, when the leaves of a flower end in a point. Quincy.

FRONTBOX. n. f. [front and box.]

The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.

How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains!
That men may say, when we the frontbox grace,
Behold the first in virtue, as in face. Pope.

FRONTED. adj. [from frons.] Formed with a front.

Part fronted brigades form. Milton.

FRONTIER. n. f. [frontiere, French.]

FRONTROOM. n. f. [front and room.] An apartment in the forepart of the house.

If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the backrooms; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow. Moxon.

FRORE. adj. [bevroren, Dutch, frozen.]

Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton.

The parching air
Burns froze, and cold performs th' effect of fire. Milton.

FRORE. adj. [bevroren, Frozen, Dutch.]

Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.

O, my heart-blood is well nigh froze I feel,
And my galage grown fast to my heele. Spenser's Past.

FROST. n. f. [frost, Saxon.]

1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man: to day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more watery parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.

Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost. Pope.

FROSTBITTEN. adj. [frost and bitten.]

His hideous tail then hurled he about,

And

And therewith all enwrap the nimble thighs
Of his froth foamy steed. Fairy Queen.
When wind expireth from under the sea, as it causeth some resounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Natural History.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain batt'ry, and in froth or bubbles end. Milton.
The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters. Glanville.

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dryden.

They were the froth may raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd, Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness. Newton.

A painter, having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all belmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Any empty or senseless shew of wit or eloquence.

3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.
Who catch his veal, pig, and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth. Tusser.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden.
Excess muddies the best wit, and only makes it
flutter and froth high. Grew.

FROTHILY, adv. [from frothy.]

1. With foam; with spume.

2. In an empty trifling manner.

FROTHY, adj. [from froth.]

1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; wasting.

Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy. Bacon.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.

What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson.

FROUNCE, n. s. A word used by falconers for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill. Skinner.

To FROUNCE, v. a. [from the noun.] To frizzle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their ruffs, and others timely dight
Their gay attire. Fairy Queen.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slowly buskin, or an overhanging frounced head. Ascham.

Thus, night oft see me in thy pale career,
'Till civil suited morn appear;
Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.

She's not froward, but modest as the dove:
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shakespeare.

Whose ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Prov. ii. 15.

Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon.

'Tis with froward men, and froward factions too, as 'tis with froward children; they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty. L'Estrange.

Motions occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple.

FROWARDLY, adv. [from froward.] Peevishly; perversely.

I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly in the way of his heart. Is. lviii. 17.

FROWARDNESS, n. s. [from froward.] Peevishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother?
how many indignities does he pass by? how many affronts does he put up at our hands? South.

We'll mutually forget

The warmth of youth, and frowardness of age. Addis. Cato.

FROWER, n. s. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath. Tusser.

Say, that she frowns; I'll say, she looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shakespeare.

They chuse their magistrate;
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
'Than ever frown'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet on?
You are too much of late i'th' frown.

'Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shakespeare, K. Lear.

Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.

The wood,
Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Wav'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below. Pope.

FROWN, n. s. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour. Knoles.

In his half-glaz'd eyes
Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Prior.

FROWNINGLY, adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?
A countenance more in sorrow than in anger. Shak.

FROWY, adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frouxy.

But if they with thy gores should yede,
They soon might be corrupted;
Or like not of the frowy sede,
Or with the weeds be glutted. Spenser's Pastorals.

FROZEN, part. pass. of freeze.

1. Congealed with cold.

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarm'd Shook Asia's crown with European arms?
Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea. Dryden.
Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth
T' invade the frozen waggon of the North. Dryden.
A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

2. Chill in affection.

Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair; but his armour naturally representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto. Sidney.

Be not ever frozen, coy;

One beam of love will soon destroy
And melt that ice to floods of joy. Carew.

3. Void of heat or appetite.

Even here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

F. K. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.

which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth. Hewel's Vocal Forest.

Where'er she looks, behold some sudden birth,
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth. Glanville.

To FRUCTIFY, v. n. To bear fruit.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify;
maketh the virtuous in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; and serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life. Hooker.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles. Brown.

FRUCTIFICATION, n. s. [from fructify.] The act of causing or of bearing fruit; fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the Spring, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch-tree, hath slender reason to doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FRUCTUOUS, adj. [fructuex, French; from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn
Oft interlac'd occur; and both imbibe
Fitting congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound! Philips.

FRUGAL, adj. [frugalis, Latin; frugal, French.] Thrifty; sparing; parsimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I oft admire,
How nature wise and frugal could commit
Such disproportions, with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater so manifold to his own use. Milton.

And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger fed
With frugal scraps of flesh and massin bread. Harte.

If through mists he shoots his sullen beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden's Virgil.

FRUGALLY, adv. [from frugal.] Parsimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

- FUSEE. n. f. [fuseau, French.]
1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.
The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusee, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale.
 2. A firelock [from fusil, French]; a small neat musquet. This is more properly written fusil.
Fuze of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderson makes twenty-seven seconds. Harris.
- FUSEE. Track of a buck. Ainsworth.
- FUSIBLE. adj. [from fuse.] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.
Colours afforded by metalline bodies, either colliquate with, or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones. Boyle.
- FUSIBILITY. n. f. [from fusible.] Capacity of being melted; quality of growing liquid by heat.
The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into a nobler use. Wotton's Architecture.
The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness. Locke.
- FUSILE. adj. [fusile, French; fusilis, Latin.]

F U S

1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.

Some, less skilful, fancy these scapi that occur in most of the larger Gothick buildings of England are artificial; and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble. Woodward.

2. Running by the force of heat.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought
Fusile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Perpetual flames,

O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn flint,
Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea. Philips.

FU'SIL. n. f. [fusil, French.]

1. A firelock; a small neat musquet.

2. [In heraldry; from fusus, Latin.]
Something like a spindle.

Fusils must be made long, and small in the middle,

armed with a fusil; a musketeer.

FU'SION. n. f. [fusio, Latin; fusjon, Fr.]

1. The act of melting.

2. The state of being melted, or of running with heat.

Metals in fusjon do not flame for want of a copious fume, except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames. Newton's Opt.

FUSS. n. f. [A low cant word.] A tumult;
a bustle.

End as it befits your station;
Come to use and application;
Nor with senates keep a fusi;
I submit, and answer thus. Swift.

FUST. n. f. [fuste, French.]

1. The trunk or body of a column.

2. [From fuste, French.] A strong smell, as that of a mouldy barrel.

To FUST. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow
mouldy; to smell ill.

FU'STIAN. n. f. [futaine, French; from fuste, a tree, because cotton grows on trees.]

1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.

Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings? Shakespeare.

2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.

Nor will you raise in me combustion,
By dint of high heroic fustian. Hudibras.

What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes! In general, I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn. Dryden.

Fustian is thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other. Dryden.

Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the close,
Oft rise to fustian, or descend to prose. Smith.

FU'ATIAN. adj. [from the noun.]

F U T

1. Made of fustian.

2. Swelling; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid. Used of style.

When men argue, th' greatest part
O' th' contest falls on terms of art,
Until the fustian stuff be spent,
And then they fall to th' argument. Hudibras.

Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylvæ, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FU'STIC. n. f. A sort of wood brought from the West-Indies, used in dying of cloth. Dict.

To FU'STIGATE. v. a. [fustigo, Latin.]
To beat with a stick; to cane. Dict.

FUSTILARIAN. n. f. [from fustly.] A low fellow; a stinkard; a scoundrel.
A word used by Shakespeare only.

Away, you scullion, you rampallian, you fustila- rian! I'll tickle your catastrophe. Shakespeare.

FU'STINESS. n. f. [from fustly.] Mouldiness; stink.

FUSTY. adj. [from fust.] Ill-smelling;
mouldy.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he were as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel. Shakespeare.

The fusty plebeians hate thine honours. Shak.
The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.
Shakespeare.

FU'TILE. adj. [futile, French; futilis,
Latin.]

1. Talkative; loquacious.

One futile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal. Bacon.

2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.

FU'TILITY. n. f. [futilité, French; from futile.]

1. Talkativeness; loquacity.

This fable does not strike so much at the futility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humour. L'Estrange.

2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

Trifling futility appears in their signs of the zodiack, and their mutual relations and aspects.
Bentley.

FU'TROCKS. n. f. [corrupted from foot hooks. Skinner.] The lower timbers that hold the ship together.

FU'TURE. adj. [futurus, Latin; futur, French.] That which will be hereafter;
to come: as, the future state.

Glory they sung to the most High! good will
To future men, and in their dwellings peace.
Milton.

He sows the teeth at Pallas's command,
And sings the future people from his hand.
Addison's Ovid.

FU'TURE. n. f. [from the adjective.]
Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

F Y

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time: and I feel now
The future in the instant. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after.
Locke.

FU'TURELY. adv. [from future.] In time to come.

This prescience of God, as it is prescience, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding;
neither doth God's foreknowledge impose any necessity, or bind. Raleigh.

FUTURITION. n. f. [from future.] The state of being to be; the condition of being come to pass hereafter.

Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no?
South.

FUTURITY. n. f. [from future.]

1. Time to come; events to come.

Not my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurity,
Can ransom me. Shakespeare's Othello.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurity, that I had your lordship for my patron.
Swift.

2. Event to come.

All futurities are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place. South.

This, great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,
Thou skill'd in fate and dark futurity. Pope.

3. The state of being to be; futurition.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurity; it requiring such a free, sedate and intent mind, as it may be, is no where found but among the platonical ideas. Glanville's Sceptis.

To FUZZ. v. n. [without etymology.]

To fly out, in small particles.

FUZZBALL. n. f. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

FY. interj. [fy, French and Flemish; φῦ, Greek; vah, Lat.] A word of blame and disapprobation.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wrecks themselves do now ally.
Spenser.

Fy, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account? Shakespeare.

A bawd, sir, fy upon him! Shakespeare.
But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!
Expectance calls thee now another way. Milton.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?
Unhand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:
Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:
My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite.
Dryden.

Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaities. Taylor.

G.

G A B

G Has two sounds, one from the Greek Γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard G, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound G retains before a, o, u, l, r; as, gate, go, gull. The other sound, called that of the soft G, resembles that of γ, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of the words before b; as, night. The Saxon ġ, seems to have had generally the sound of γ consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

GA'BARDINE. n. f. [gavardina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.

My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabouts. Shakespeare.

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog, And spit upon my Jewish gabardine. Shakesf.

The knight did straight submit, And laid his weapons at her feet: Next he disrob'd his gabardine, And with it did himself resign. Hudibras.

To GA'BLE. v. n. [gabbare, Italian; gabberen, Dutch.]

1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage, Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes With words that made them known. Shakespeare.
Flocks of fowl, that when the tempest roar, With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent shore. Dryden.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house? Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

Which made some think, when he did gabble, Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Hudibras.
Such a rout, and such a rabble, Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.

GA'BLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.

Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: enough's language, gabble enough, and good enough. Shakespeare's A. l. well that ends well.

2. Loud talk without meaning.

Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud Among the builders; each to other calls, not understood. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GA'BELER. n. f. [from gabble.] A prater; a chattering fellow.

GA'BEL. n. f. [gabello, French; gabella, Italian; gafel, Saxon, a tribute.] An excise; a tax.

His battery was defended all along with gabions, and casks filled with sand. Kneller.

GA'BLE. n. f. [gaval, Welsh; gable, French.] The sloping roof of a building.

Take care, that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GAD. n. f. gab, Saxon; gaddur, Islandick, a club.]

1. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

2. It seems to be used by Shakespeare for a stile or graver [from gab, Saxon, a goad.

I will go get a leaf of brass, And with a gad of steel will write these words. Shakespeare.

To GAD. v. n. [Derived by Skinner from gadfly; by Junius from gadaw, Welsh, to forsake; thought by others only the preterite of the old word agaan, to go.] To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.

How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent. Shakesp.

Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclef. xiv. 25.

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore, And thronged forth about the world to gad; Each land they fill'd, river, stream and shore. Fairfax.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call Of an untrained hope or passion; To court each place or fortune that doth fall, Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.

Thou, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves, With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown, And all their echo's moan. Milton.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their stings draw blood,

And drive the cattle gadding through the wood. Dryden.

She wreaks her anger on her rival's head; With furies frights her from her native home, And drives her gadding, round the world to roam. Dryden.

There's an ox lost, and this cockcomb runs a gadding after wild fowl. L'Estrange.

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually shifting from what disgusts them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding. Locke.

GADDER. n. f. [from gad.] A rambler: one that ruds much abroad without business.

A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, causeth great noise, and she will not cover her own shame. Ecclef. xiv. 8.

G A G

GA'DDINGLY. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

GA'DFLY. n. f. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad; it is called goadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gab, and fly.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about; the breese.

The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swimmeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general consent. Raleigh.

Havock and spoil, and ruin are my gain. Milton.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and guins;
for fight gains make heavy purses; for light gains
come thick, whereas great come but now and then. Bacon's Essays.

This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great stock that he is content to turn that way, and is invited by the gains. Temple.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
All suits his cloth the praise of raving well. Dryden.

Folly fights for kings or dives for gain. Pope.

2. Interest; lucrative views.

That, sir, which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shakespeare.

3. Unlawful advantage.

Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom
I sent unto you? 2 Cor. xii. 17.

If pride, if envy, if the lust of gain,
If mad ambition in thy bosom reign,
Thou boast'st, alas! thy sober sense in vain. Fitzgerald.

I acceptance found, which gain'd

This answer from the gracious voice divine. Milton.

That hide from small reflection gains

Of glimm'ring air, less vex'd with tempest loud. Milton.

If such a tradition were endeavoured to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult to conceive however it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.

For fame with toil we gain, but lose with ease,
Sure some to vex, but never all to please. Pope.

5. To obtain increase of any thing allotted.

I know that ye would gain the time, because ye see the king is gone from me. Dan. ii. 8.

Handy; ready; dexterous.

Preface to the Accidence.

GA'INER. n. s. [from gain.] One who receives profit or advantage.

The client, besides retaining a clear conscience, is always a gainer, and by no means can be at any loss, as seeing, if the composition be overhard, he may relieve himself by recourse to his oath. Bacon.

If what I get in empire

I lose in fame, I think myself no gainer. Denham's Sophy.

He that loses any thing, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainer by the loss. L'Estrange.

By trade, we are as great gainers by the commodities of other countries as of our own nation. Addison's Freeholder.

GA'INFUL. adj. [gain and full.]

1. Advantageous; profitable.

He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project. South.

2. Lucrative; productive of money.

Nor knows he merchants gainful care. Dryden.

Maro's muse commodious precepts gives,

Instructive to the swains, nor wholly bent

On what is gainful: sometimes she diverts

From solid counsels. Philips.

GA'INFULLY. adv. [from gainful.] Profitably; advantageously.

GA'INFULNESS. n. s. [from gainful.]
Profit; advantage.

GA'INGIVING. n. s. ['gainst and give.]
The same as misgiving; a giving against;

as gainfaying, which is still in use, is saying against, or contradicting.

It is but foolery; but it is such kind of gain- giving as would, perhaps, trouble a woman. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

GA'INLESS. adj. [from gain.] Unprofitable; producing no advantage.

GA'INLESSNESS. n. s. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainlessness as well as laboriousness of the work; miners, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the insatiable miser. Decay of Piety.

GA'INLY. adv. [from gain.] Handily;
readily; dexterously. Out of use.

To GA'INSAY. v. a. ['gainst and say.]

1. To contradict; to oppose; to controvert with; to dispute against.

Speeches which gain-say one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject. Hooker.

Too facile then, thou didst not much gain-say;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton.

2. To deny any thing.

I never heard yet
That any of those bolder vices wanted
Less impudence to gain-say what they did
Than to perform it first. Shakespeare.

GA'INSA'YER. n. s. [from gain-say.] Opponent; adversary.

Such as may satisfy gain-sayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the same at our hands. Hooker.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest gain-sayers of Scripture, even in that which we read for Scripture unto the people. Hooker.

It was full matter of conviction to all gain-sayers. Hammond.

Others

Others sought themselves a name by being his gainfaying, but failed of their purpose. Fell.
GAINST. prep. [for against.] See A-GAINST.

Tremble, ye nations! who, secure before,
Laugh'd at those arms, that gainst ourselves we bore.
Dryden.

To GA'INSTAND. v. a. ['gainst and stand.]
To withstand; to oppose; to resist. A proper word, but not in use.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverent duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires. Sidney.

GA'IRISH. adj. [German, to dress fine, Saxon.].

1. Gaudy; showy; splendid; fine.

Three or four will outrage in apparel, huge hose, monstrous hats, and gairish colours. Ascham.

I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was;
A mother, only mock'd with two fair babes;
A dream of what thou wast, a gairish flag,
To be the aim of every dangerous shot. Shakesp.

There in close covert by some brook,
Where no profaner eye may look,
Hide me from day's gairish eye. Milton.

2. Extravagantly gay; flighty.

Fame and glory transport a man out of himself:
it makes the mind loose and gairish, scatters the spirits, and leaves a kind of dissolution upon all the faculties. South.

GA'IRISHNESS. n. f. [from gairish.]

1. Finery; flaunting gaudiness.

2. Flighty or extravagant joy.

Let your hope be without vanity, or gairishness
of spirit, but sober, grave, and silent. Taylor.

GAIT. n. f. [gat, Dutch.].

1. Away; as, gang your gait.

Good youth, address thy gait unto her;
Be not denied access, stand at her door. Shakesp.

2. March; walk.

Nought regarding, they kept on their gait,
And all her vain allurements did forsake. Fairy Queen.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait. Hubb. Tale.

3. The manner and air of walking.

Great Juno comes; I know her by her gait.
Shakesp.

He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion. Clarendon.

A third, who, by his gait
And fierce demeanor, seems the prince of hell.
Milton.

Leviathans
Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait.
Milton.

I describ'd his way,
Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait.
Milton.

GALA'GE. n. f. A shepherd's dog. Not in use.

My heart-blood is well nigh frore, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser.

GALA'NGAL. n. f. [galange, French.]. A medicinal root.

The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste. Hill.

GALA'XY. n. f. [γαλαξία; galaxie, Fr.].

The milky way; a stream of light in the sky, consisting of many small stars.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tan'd. Cleaveland.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand so thick i' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy. Cowley.
We dare not undertake to shew what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy. Bentley.

GALBANUM. n. f.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops of tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft, like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour: its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant. Hill.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum. Ecclef. xiv. 15.

GALE. n. f. [gab'ling, hasty, sudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona?
Shakespeare.

Winds
Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their lost wings, and Flora's earliest smells. Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air.
Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside. Addison.

GA'LEATED. adj. [galeatus, Latin.].

1. Covered as with a helmet.

A galeated echinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing.
Woodward on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling an helmet, as the monkshood.

GALERY'GULATE. adj. [from galerus,
Latin.] Covered as with a hat.

GA'LIOT. n. f. [galiotte, French.]. A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very slight and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three pattereroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar. Diſt.

Barbarossa sent two notable pyrates with thirty *galliot*s, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered, and forced again to their *galliot*s.
Knolles's History.

GALL. n. f. (geala, Saxon; galle, Dutch.].

1. The bile, an animal juice remarkable for its supposed bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers! Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.

This position informs us of a vulgar error,
terming the gall bitter, as their proverb implies,
It's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gustable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet savour. Harvey.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk:
Beerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. The part which contains the bile.

The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar. Brown.

3. Any thing extremely bitter.

Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste!
Shakespeare.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more.
Dryd. Juv.

4. Rancour; malignity.

They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people.
Spenser on Ireland.

5. Anger; bitterness of mind.

Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and shuns the blow. Prior.

6. A slight hurt by fretting off the skin.
[From the verb.]

This is the fatalist wound; as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scratch.
Government of the Tongue.

7. [From galla.]

Galls or galnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have Oriental and European galls: the Oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste.

The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: An insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation shall be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescencies which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true galls, though less firm in their texture. Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon's Natural History.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed. Ray on the Creation.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them. Derham.

To GALL. v. a. [galer, French.].

1. To hurt by fretting the skin.

I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast.
Denham.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and interrupting spoke,
Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling chain. Pope.

2. To impair; to wear away.

He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being galled with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakespeare.

If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses. Ray.

3. To tease; to fret; to vex.

In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hooker.

What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we espy that it *gall*eth them. Hooker.

When

When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall.

Shakespeare.

All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke.

Shak. Hen. IV.

No man commits any sin but his conscience finites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it.

Tillotson.

4. To harass; to mischief; to keep in a state of uneasiness.

The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them.

Sidney.

Light demerits from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe.

Dryd. Æn.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows.

Addison.

To GALL. v. n. To fret.

I have seen you gleeing and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.

Shakespeare.

GALLANT. adj. [galant, French, from gala, fine dress, Spanish.]

1. Gay; well dressed; showy; splendid; magnificent.

A place of broad rivers, wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ships pass thereby.

Is. xxxiii. 21.

The gay, the wise, the gallant, and the grave,
Subdu'd alike, all but one passion have.

Waller.

2. Brave; high spirited; daring; magnanimous.

Scorn, that any should kill his uncle, made him seek his revenge in manner gallant enough.

Sidney.

But, fare thee well, thou art a gallant youth.

Shakespeare.

A gallant man, whose thoughts fly at the highest game, requires no further insight.

Digby.

3. Fine; noble; spacious.

There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
But hollow men, like hories-hot at hand,
Make gallant shew and promise of their mettle.

Shakespeare.

4. Courtly with respect to ladies.

He discoursed, how gallant and how brave a thing it would be for his highness to make a journey into Spain, and to fetch home his mistress.

Clarendon.

When first the soul of love is sent abroad,
The gay troops begin
In gallant thought to plume their painted wings.

Thomson.

GALLANT. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. A gay, sprightly, airy, splendid man.

The new proclamation.

—What is't for?

—The reformation of our travell'd gallants,
That fill the court with quarrels, talk, and taylor's.

Shakespeare.

The gallants and lusty youths of Naples came and offered themselves unto Valtius.

Kneller.

The gallants, to protect the lady's right,
Their lachrymose brandish'd at the giddy spright.

Dryden.

Gallants, look to't, you say there are no sprights;
But I'll come dance about your beds at nights.

Dryden.

2. A whoremaster, who caresses women to debauch them.

One, worn to pieces with age, shews himself a young gallant.

Shakespeare.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant.

Addison's Spectator.

3. A wooer; one who courts a woman for marriage. In the two latter senses it has commonly the accent on the last syllable.

GALLANTLY. adv. [from gallant.]

1. Gayly; splendidly.

2. Bravely; nobly; generously.

You have not dealt so gallantly with us as we did with you in a parallel case: last year a paper was brought here from England, which we ordered to be burnt by the common hangman.

Swift.

GALLANTRY. n. f. [galanterie, French.]

1. Splendour of appearance; show; magnificence; glittering grandeur; ostentatious finery.

Make the sea shine with gallantry, and all The English youth flock to their admiral.

Waller.

2. Bravery; nobleness; generosity.

Glanv. Scept. Preface.

3. A number of gallants.

Hector, Deiphobus, and all the gallantry of Troy, I would have arm'd to-day.

Shakespeare.

4. Courtship; refined address to women.

The martial Moors, in gallantry refin'd,
Invent new arts to make their charmers kind.

Granville.

5. Vicious love; lewdness; debauchery.

It looks like a sort of compounding between virtue and vice, as if a woman were allowed to be vicious, provided she be not a profligate; as if there were a certain point where gallantry ends, and infamy begins.

Swift.

GALLEASS. n. f. [galeas, French.]

A heavy low-built vessel, with both sails and pars. It carries three masts, but they cannot be lowered, as in a galley. It has thirty-two seats for rovers, and six or seven slaves to each. To carry three tire of guns at the head, and at the stern there are two tire of guns.

Diët.

The Venetians pretend they could set out, in case of great necessity, thirty men of war, a hundred galleys, and ten galleasses.

Addison on Italy.

My father hath no less

Than three great argosies, besides two galleasses,
And twelve tight gallies.

Shakespeare.

GALLEON. n. f. [galion, French.]

A large ship with four or sometimes five decks, now in use only among the Spaniards.

I assured them that I would stay for them at Trinidad, and that no force should drive me thence, except I were sunk, or set on fire by the Spanish galleons.

Raleigh's Apology.

The number of vessels were one hundred and thirty, whereof galleasses and galleons seventy-two goodly ships, like floating towers or castles.

Bacon's War with Spain.

GALLERY. n. f. [galerie, French; derived by Du Cange from galeria, low Latin, a fine room.]

1. A kind of walk along the floor of a house, into which the doors of the apartments open; in general, any building of which the length much exceeds the breadth.

In most part there had been framed by art such pleasant arbors, that, one answering another, they became a gallery aloft from tree to tree, almost round about, which below gave a perfect shadow.

Sidney.

High lifted up were many lofty towers,
And goodly galleries fair overlaid.

Spenser.

Your gallery

Have we pass'd through, not without much content.

Shakespeare.

The row of return on the banquet side, let it be all stately galleries, in which galleries let there be three cupolas.

Bacon.

A private gallery 'twixt th' apartments led,
Not to the foe yet known.

Denham.

Nor is the shape of our cathedrals proper for our preaching auditories, but rather the figure of an amphitheatre, with galleries gradually overlooking each other; for into this condition the parish churches of London are driving space, as appears by the many galleries every day built in them.

Granp.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five different churches.

Addison.

2. The seats in the playhouse above the pit, in which the meaner people sit.

While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends.

Pope.

GALLETYLE. n. f. I suppose this word has the same import with gallipot.

Make a compound body of glass and galletyles that is, to have the colour milky like a chalcedon, being a stuff between a porcellane and a glass.

Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GALLEY. n. f. [galea, Italian; galere, French; derived, as some think, from galea, a helmet, pictured anciently on the prow; as others from γαλιών, the sword-fish; as others from galleon, expressing in Syriac men exposed to the sea. From galley come galleass, galleon, galliot.]

1. A vessel driven with oars, much in use in the Mediterranean, but found unable to endure the agitation of the main ocean.

Great Neptune grieved underneath the load
Of ships, hulks, gallies, barks and brigandines.

Fairfax.

In the ages following, navigation did every where greatly decay, by the use of gallies, and such vessels as could hardly brook the ocean.

Bacon.

Jafon ranged the coasts of Asia the Less in an open boat or kind of galley.

Raleigh's History.

On oozy ground his gallies moor;
Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore.

Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the gallies for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure.

South.

GALLEY-SLAVE. n. f. [galley and slave.]

A man condemned for some crime to row in the gallies.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor men, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy.

Bramb.

Hardened galley-slaves despise manumission.

Decay of Piety.

The surges gently dash against the shore,
Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar.

Garib.

GALLIARD. n. f. [gaillard, French; imagined to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius; and gay.]

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Selden is a galliard by himself.

Cleveland.

2. An active, nimble, spritely dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

There's nought in France

That can be with a nimble galliard won:
You cannot revel into dukedoms there.

Shakespeare.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on: as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards.

Bacon.

The tripla's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard time and measure time are in the melody of one dance.

Bacon.

GALLIARDISE. n. f. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gaiety. Not in use.

G A L

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company. Brown.

GALLICISM. n. f. [gallicisme, French; from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he beld this conduct; he beld the same language that another had beld before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In English I would have Gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech. Fielden on the Clasp.

GALLIGASKINS. n. f. [Caligæ Gallo-Vascomum. Skinner.] Large open hose. Not used but in ludicrous language.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood The Winter's fury, and encroaching frosts, By time subdu'd, what will not time subdue, An horrid chasm disclose. Philips.

GALLIMATIA. n. f. [galimathias, French.] Nonseuse; talk without meaning.

GALLIMAUFRY. n. f. [galimafrée, Fr.]

1. A hoch-poch, or hash of several sorts of broken meat; a medley. Hanmer.

They have made of our English tongue a gallimaufry, or hodgepodge of all other speeches. Spenser.

2. Any inconsistent or ridiculous medley.

They have a dance, which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in't. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The painter who, under pretence of diverting the eyes, would fill his picture with such varieties as alter the truth of history would make a ridiculous piece of painting, and a mere gallimaufry of his work. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. It is used by Shakespeare ludicrously of a woman.

Sir John affects thy wife.
—Why, sir, my wife is not young.
—He wooes both high and low, both rich and poor;
He loves thy gallimaufry friend, Shakespeare.

GALLIOT. n. f. [galiotte, French.] A small swift galley.

Barbarossa departing out of Hellepontus with eighty gallies and certain *galliot*s, shaped his course towards Italy. Kneller's History.

GALLIPOT. n. f. [gleye, Dutch, shining earth. Skinner. The true derivation is from gala, Spanish, finery. Gala, or gallypot, is a fine painted pot.] A pot painted and glazed, commonly used for medicines.

Plato said his master Socrates was like the apothecary's *gallipot*s, that had on the outides apes, owls, and satyrs; but within, precious drugs. Bacon's Apophth.

Here phials in nice discipline are set;
There gallipots are rang'd in alphabet. Carib.

Alexandrinus thought it unsafe to trust the real secret of his phial and gallipot to any man. Spellicator.

Thou that dost Æsculapius decide,
And o'er his gallipots in triumph ride. Fenton.

GALLON. n. f. [gelo, low Latin.] A liquid measure of four quarts.

Beat them into powder, and boil them in a gallon of wine, in a vessel close stopped. Wise man's Surgery.

GALLON. n. f. [galon, French.] A kind of close lace made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

To GALLOP. v. n. [galoper, French.] Derived by all the etymologists, after Budæus, from καλπαζω; but perhaps it comes from gant, all, and loper, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

VOL. I.

G A L

I did hear

The galloping of horse: who was't come by? Shak.

His steeds will be restrain'd,
But gallop lively down th' western hill. Donne.

In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain
His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,
When half surpris'd, and fearing to be seen,
The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen. Dryd.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatened a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them. Sidney.

They 'gan espy

An armed knight towards them gallop fast,
That seem'd from some feared foe to fly. Fairy Qu.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed. Locke.

3. To move very fast.

The golden sun

Gallops the zodiack in his glitt'ring coach. Shaksp.

Whom doth time gallop withal?

—With a thief to the gallows. Shakespeare.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie:
such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over
it. Locke.

GALLOP. n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forwards, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once. Farrier's Dict.

GALLOPER. n. f. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

GALLOWAY. n. f. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the North; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

To GALLOW. v. a. [agalpan, to fright,
Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies

Gallow the very wand'ers of the dark,
And make them keep their caves. Shakespeare.

GALLOWGLASSES. n. f.

1. It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen the Irish call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallogla signifies an English servitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armatura; and was instead of the footman that now weareth a corset, before the corset was used, or almost invented. Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hanmer, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r

Of gallowglasses and stout kernes,
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shaksp.

GALLOW. } n. f. [It is used by some in GALLOW. } the singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowses. Galgo, Gothick; gealga, Saxon; galge, Dutch; which some derive from gabalus furca, Latin; others from גבול high, others from gallu, Welsh, power; but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from agalpan, the gallows being the great object of legal terrour.]

G A M

1. A beam laid over two posts, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of gallows: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money.
Sidney.

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gaolers and gal-lowses. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

I prophesied if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown. Shaksp. Tempest.

He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected.
Hayward.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of wasps while he is upon

On my refusal, to distress me more;
Or make a game of my calamities? Milton's Ag.

4. A single match at play.

5. Advantage in play.

Mutual vouchers for our fame we stand,
And play the game into each other's hand. Dryden.

6. Scheme pursued; measures planned.

This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other 'till they see an end of this. Temple.

7. Field sports: as, the chase, falconry.

If about this hour he make his way,
Under the colour of his usual game,
He shall here find his friends with horse and men,
To set him free from his captivity. Shakespeare.

What arms to use, or nets to frame
Wild beasts to combat, or to tame,
With all the myst'ries of that game. Waller.

Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game,
spied a company of bustards and cranes. L'Estrange.

8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.

Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game,
With war, and hostile snare, such as refuse Subjection to his empire tyrannous. Milton.

'Tis here is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I know not which to follow. Dryden.

A bloodhound will follow the person he pursues, and all hounds the particular game they have in chase. Arbutnot.

Go, with thy Cynthia hurl the pointed spear
At the rough bear, or chase the flying deer;
I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,
At human hearts we sling, nor ever miss the game. Prior.

Proud Nimrod first the bloody chase began,
A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous name,
And makes his trembling slaves the royal game. Pope.

Shorten my labour, if its length you blame,
For, grow but wise, you rob me of my game. Young.

9. Solemn contests, exhibited, as spectacles to the people.

The games are done, and Cæsar is returning. Shakespeare.

Milo, when ent'ring the Olympick game,
With a huge ox upon his shoulders came. Denham.

GA'MESOMELY. adv. [from gamesome.] Merrily.

GA'MESTER. n. f. [from game.]

1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.

Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shakespeare.

A gamester, the greater master he is in his art, the worse man he is. Bacon.

Gamsters for whole patrimonies play;
The steward brings the deeds, which must convey
The whole estate. Dryden's Juvenal.

Could we look into the mind of a common gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and mattedores: her slumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves. Addison.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate;
What agony of soul she feels
To see a knave's inverted heels. Swift.

Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamester, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no superior. Law.

2. One who is engaged at play.

When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,
The gentler gamester is the soonest winner. Shakespeare.

A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker-on: but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business straight. Bacon.

3. A merry frolicksome person.

You're a merry gamester,
My lord Sands. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

1. The buttock of an hog salted and dried; the lower end of the flitch.

Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold:
A rusty gammon of some seven years old. Dryden.

Gammons, that give a relish to the taste,
And potted toad, and fish, come in so fast,
That ere the first is out, the second stinks. Dryden.

2. A kind of play with dice.

The quick dice,
In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The sounding gammon. Thomson's Autumn.

GA'MUT. n. f. [gama, Italian.] The scale of musical notes.

Madam, before you touch the instrument,
To learn the order of my fingering,
I must begin with rudiments of art.
To teach you gamut in a briefer sort. Shakespeare.

When by the gamut some musicians make
A perfect song, others will undertake,
By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:
Things simply good can never be unfit. Donne.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a feuge expire. Addison.

G A N

To GA'NGRENATE. v. a. [from gangrene.] To produce a gangrene; to mortify.

Parts cauterized, gangrenated, fiderated, and mortified, become black, the radical moisture or vital sulphur suffering an extinction. Brown's Vul. Err.

GA'NGRENE. n. f. [gangrene, French; gangræna, Latin.] A mortification; a stoppage of circulation followed by putrefaction.

This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay,
By cutting hope, like a lopt limb, away. Waller.

A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene. Wifeman's Surgery.

If the substance of the soul is fettered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: these inflammations will rage to all eternity. Addison's Spectator.

To GA'NGRENE. v. a. [gangrener, French; from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.

In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrene with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently; for that the few spirits that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete. Bacon.

Gangren'd members must be lop'd away,
Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay. Dryden.

To GA'NGRENE. v. n. To become mortified.

Wounds immedicable
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton's Agonistes.

As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in flat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out. Wifeman.

act of cultivating or planning gardens.

My compositions in gardening are after the Pin-darick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of
art. Spektator.

GARE. n. f. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep. Dist.

GARGARISM. n. f. [γαργαρισμός; gargarisme, French.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with. Quincy.

Apoplegmatisms and gargarisms draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon's Natural History.

To GARGARIZE. v. a. [γαργαρίζω; garga-rifer, French.] To wash the mouth with medicated liquors.

Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarised, doth ease the hiccough; for that it is astringent, and inhibits the motion of the spirit. Bacon.

This being relaxed, may make a shaking of the larynx; as when we gargarize. Holder.

GARGET. n. f. A distemper in cattle.

The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GARGLE. v. a. [gargouiller, French; ga-gogliare, Ital. gurgel, German, the throat.]

1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.

Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxycrate.
Hurvey.

The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stopp'd by gargling with oxycrate. Wifeman's Surgery.

They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
Next gargle well their throats. Dryden's Pers.

2. To warble; to play in the throat. An improper use.

Those which only warble long,
And gargle in their throats a song. Waller.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd a while to doat
On nonsense gargled in an eunuch's throat. Fenton.

GARGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.

His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure. Wifeman's Surgery.

GARGLION. n. f. An exudation of nervous juice from a bruise, or the like, which indurates into a hard immovable tumour.

Quincy.

GARGOL. n. f. A distemper in hogs.

The signs of the gargol in hogs are, hanging down of the head, moist eyes, staggering, and loss of appetite. Mortimer.

GARLAND. n. f. [garlands, guirland, Fr.]

1. A wreath of branches or flowers.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,
A garland made, on temples for to wear;
For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village-lord that Whitsuntide to bear. Sidney.
A reeling world will never stand upright,
'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm:
—How! wear the garland! do'st thou mean the crown?

—Ay, my good lord. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Then party-coloured flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head. Dryd.

Vanquish again; though she be gone,
Whose garland crown'd the victor's hair,
And reign; though she has left the throne,
Who made thy glory worth thy care. Prior.

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew. Pope.

2. The top; the principal; the thing most prized.

With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. Shakefp.

GARLICK. n. f. [garl, Saxon, a lance;
and lick, the leek that shoots up in blades.
Skinner. Allium, Lat.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain:
the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corym-bus on the top of the stalk; and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds. Miller.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acid and pungent taste. It is extremely active, as may be proved by applying plaisters of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath.
Hill.

Garlick has, of all our plants, the greatest strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Temple.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a sacred pow'r:
Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods. Tate.

GARLICK Pear-tree. n. f.

This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the pointal, it becomes a round fruit, which when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp,
but a strong scent of garlick. Miller.

GARLICK Wild. n. f. A plant.

GARLICK EATER. n. f. [garlick and eat] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,
You and your apron men, that stood so much Upon the voice of occupation, and
The breath of garlick eaters. Shakespeare's Coriol.

GARMENT. n. f. [guarnimen, old French.]
Any thing by which the body is covered;
cloaths; dress.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments. Shakefp. Coriolanus.

Our leaf, once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers. Raleigh's Hist.

Fairest thing that shines below,
Why in this robe dost thou appear?
Would'st thou a while more perfect show,
Thou must at all no garment wear. Cowley.

Three worthy persons from his side it tore,
And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore.
Waller.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady when she is dressed. Addison's Spect.

Let

G A R

Let him that sues for the coat, i. e. the shirt, or inner garment, take the cloak also, is a proverbial phrase too; for in the truth of the letter, a shirt is no likely matter of a lawsuit, and signifies an uncontesting sufferance of such small losses. Kettlewell.

GARNER. n. f. [genier, French.] A place in which threshed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and boyson plenty,
Barns and garners never empty. Shakespeare.

For sundry foes the rural realm surround;
The fieldmouse bulks her garner under ground:
For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole. Dryd.

To GARNER. v. a. [from the noun.] To store as in garners.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life. Shakespeare.

GARNET. n. f. [garnato, Italian; granatus, low Latin; from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of bluish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightness of the ruby. Hill.

The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients: the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple. Woodward's Met. Fossils.

To GARNISH. v. a. [garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages.

There were hills which garnished their proud heights with stately trees. Sidney.

All within with flowers was garnished,
That, when mild Zephyrus amongst them blew,
Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colours shew. Spenser.

With taper light

To seek the beauteous eye of heav'n to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shakespeare.

Paradise was a terrestrial garden, garnished with fruits, delighting both the eye and the taste. Raleigh.

All the streets were garnished with the citizens, standing in their liveries. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To embellish a dish with something laid round it.

With what expence and art, how richly dress'd!
Garnish'd with 'sparagus, himself a feast! Dryd.
No man lards fat pork with orange-peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitcock'd eel. King's Cookery.

3. To fit with fetters. A cant term.

GARNISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

So are you, sweet,
Ev'n in the lovely garnish of a boy. Shakespeare.

Matter and figure they produce;
For garnish this, and that for use;
They seek to feed and please their guests. Prior.

2. Things strewed round a dish.

3. [In gaols.] Fetters. A cant term.

4. Penitencia carceraria; an acknowledgment in money when first a prisoner goes into a gaol. Ainsworth.

GARNISHMENT. n. f. [from garnish.] Ornament; embellishment.

The church of Santa Giustina in Padoua is a sound piece of good art, where the materials being ordinary stone, without any garnishment of sculpture, ravish the beholders. Wotton.

GARNITURE. n. f. [from garnish.] Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in garniture of their knees, that they are inferior in turniture of their heads. Gov. of Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your eyes an age ago,
Is lost, without the garniture of show. Granville.

As nature has poured out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very assiduous in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art. Addison's Spectator.

G A R

GAROUS. adj. [from garum.] Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet-cat an offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish; whereof this humour may be a garous excretion, and olidous separation. Brown.

GARRAN. n. f. [Erse. It imports the same as gelding. The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby. A Highland horse, which, when brought into the North of England, takes the name of galloway.

When he comes forth, he will make their cows and garrans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Spenser.

Every man would be forced to provide winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garrans shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrans would decrease. Temple.

GARRET. n. f. [garite, the tower of a citadel, French.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commission'd by the government,
Are seldom to an empty garret sent. Dryden.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret. Arbutnot's John Bull.

On earth the god of wealth was made
Sole patron of the building trade;
Leaving the arts the spacious air,
With licence to build castles there:
And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,
To lodge in garrets, comes from thence. Swift.

2. Rotten wood. Not in use.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret. Bacon.

GARRETER. n. f. [from garret.] An inhabitant of a garret.

GARRISON. n. f. [garrison, French.]

1. Soldiers placed in a fortified town or castle to defend it.

How oft he said to me,

Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison. Sidney.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill confin'd,
With a new chain of garrisons you bind. Waller.

3. The state of being placed in a fortification for its defence.

Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies. Spenser on Ireland.

To GARRISON. v. a. [from the noun.] To secure by fortresses.

Others those forces join,

Which garrison the conquests near the Rhine. Dryd. Juv.

GARRULITY. n. f. [garrulitas, Latin.]

1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue; inability to keep a secret.

Let me here

Expatiate, if possible, my crime,
Shameful garrulity. Milton's Agonistes.

2. The quality of talking too much; talkativeness.

Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided: first of all, loquacity or garrulity. Ray on the Creat.

GARRULOUS. adj. [garrulus, Latin.] Prating; talkative.

Old age looks out,

And garrulous recounts the seats of youth. Thomson.

GARTER. n. f. [gardus, Welsh; jartier, French; from gar. Welsh, the binding of the knee.]

1. A string or ribband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit. Shakespeare's Timon of the Shrew.

G A S

When we rest in our cloaths we loosen our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage. Ray.

Handsome garters at your knees. Swift.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves,
And all the trophies of his former loves. Pope.

2. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my george, my garter.

—The george, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;
The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue. Shakespeare. R. III.

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race. Dryden.

3. The principal king at arms.

To GARTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a garter.

He, being in love, could not see to garter his hose. Shakespeare.

A person was wounded in the leg, below the gartering place. Wise man's Surgery.

GARTH. n. f. [as if girth, from gird.] The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.

GAS. n. f. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated: but he uses it loosely in many senses. Harris.

GASCONADE. n. f. [French; from Gascon, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.

Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you? Swift.

To GASCONADE. v. n. [from the noun.]

To boast; to brag; to bluster.

To GASH. v. a. [from hacher, to cut, Fr. Skinner.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gash'd or gores to death. Hayward.

Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gasb with it: but to carve a beautiful image requires art. Tillotson.

See me gasb'd with knives,
Or fear'd with burning steel. Rowe's Royal Com.

Streaming with blood, all over gasb'd with wounds,
He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell. Philips.

GASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

He glancing on his helmet, made a large
And open gasb therein; were not his target,
That broke the violence of his intent,
The weary soul from thence it would disengage. Spenser.

A perilous gasb, a very limb lopt off. Shakespeare.

Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lists: but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gasb on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground. Hayward.

But th' ethereal substance clos'd
Not long divisible; and from the gasb
A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd. Milton.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was fond of back-sword and cudgel play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gasb and scar. Arbutnot.

GA'SKINS. n. f. [from Gascoigne. See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hose; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold;
Or, if both break, your gaskins fail. Shakespeare.

To GASP. v. n. [from gaze, Skinner; from gispe, Danish, to sob, Junius.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to catch breath with labour.

The

The sick for air before the portal gasp. Dryden
They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;
But the weak voice deceiv'd their *gasp*ing throats.

The *gasp*ing head flies off; a purple blood Flows from the trunk. Dryden's Æn.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air, but fire. Dryd.
A scantling of wit lay *gasp*ing for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish. Dryden.

The rich countrymen in Austria were faint and *gasp*ing for breath. Brown's Travels.

Pale and faint,
He *gasp*s for breath; and, as his life flows from him,
Demands to see his friends. Addison's Cato.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.

I lay me down to gasp my latest breath;
The vultures will get a breakfast by my death. Dryd.
He staggers round, his eyeballs roll in death,
And with short sobs he *gasp*s away his breath.

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as nature never expresses desire by *gasp*ing.

The Cætilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and *gasp*ed after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom.

GASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.
2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.

His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name
Is at last *gasp*d. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;
And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick. Shak.

If in the dread hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,
When the cold damp bedews your brow,
You hope for mercy, shew it now. Addison.

- TO GASP. v. a. [from gatz, Saxon. See AGHAST.] To make aghast; to fright;
to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.

When he saw my best alarm'd spirits
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to the encounter,
Or whether *gasp*d by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he died. Shakespeare's King Lear.

- GA'STRICK. adj. [from γαστήρ.] Belonging to the belly.

GASTRO'GRAPHY. n. f. [γαστήρ and γράφω.]
In strictness of etymology signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptation it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestine.

Sharp's Surgery.

GASTRO'TOMY. n. f. [γαστήρ and τομή.]
The act of cutting open the belly.

GATE. n. f. [geat, Saxon]

1. The door of a city, castle, palace, or large building.

Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!
My soul flies through these wounds to seek thee. Shak.

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into inclosed grounds.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?
—Both stile and gate, horseway and footpath. Shak.

3. An avenue; an opening.

Austria had done nothing but wisely and politickly, in setting the Venetians together by the ears with the Turk, and opening a gate for a long war. Knolles.

GA'TEVEIN. n. f. The vena porta.

Being a king that loved wealth, he could not endure to have trade sick, nor any obstruction to continue in the gatevein which disperseth that blood.

Bacon's Henry VII.

GA'TEWAY. n. f. [gate and way.] A way through gates of inclosed grounds.

Gateways between inclosures are so miry, that they cannot cart between one field and another.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a ga- therer. Wotton.

To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees. Locke.

4. To crop; to pluck.

What have I done?

To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground! Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. To assemble.

They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.

All the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon.

6. To heap up; to accumulate.

He that by usury and unjust gain increaseth his substance, shall gather it for him that will pity the poor. Proverbs.

7. To select and take.

Save us, O Lord, and gather us from among the heathen, to give thanks unto thy holy name. Pf. cvi. 47.

8. To sweep together.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind.

Mat. xiii. 47.

9. To collect charitable contributions.

10. To bring into one body or interest.

I will gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him. Is. lvi. 8.

11. To draw together from a state of diffusion; to compress; to contract.

Immortal Tully shone,
The Roman rostra deck'd the consul's throne;
Gath'ring his flowing robe he seem'd to stand,
Inact to speak, and graceful stretch'd his hand. Pope.

12. To gain.

He gathers ground upon her in the chace;
Now breathes upon her hair with nearer pace. Dryd.

13. To pucker needlework.

14. To collect logically; to know by inference.

Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,

Of his own door being shut against his entrance. Shak.
After he had seen the vision, we endeavour'd to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us. Acts.

From this doctrine of the increasing and lessening of sin in this respect, we may gather, that all sins are not alike and equal, as the stoicks of ancient times, and their followers, have falsely imagined.

Perkins.

Return'd

By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton's Par. Lost.

Mademoiselle de Scudery, who is as old as Silyb, is translating Chaucer into French: from which I gather that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal. Dryden.

15. To draw together in needlework.

16. TO GATHER B. ch. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity

The luckless lucky maid

To gather breath, in many miseries. Spenser.

TO GA'THER. v. n.

1. To be condensed; to thicken.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear. Dryden.
When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh my boys! he cries,
Dryd.

When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, East, and West, on airy couriers bor'n,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn. Dryd.

Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it. Addison.

2. To grow larger by the accretion of similar matter.

Their snow-ball did not gather as it went; for the people came in to them. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. To assemble.

There be three things that mine heart searcheth;
the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Eccles. xxvi. 5.

4. To generate pus or matter.

Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Piety.

GA'THER. n. f. [from the verb.] Pucker;
cloth drawn together in wrinkles,

Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches, and the gathers,
Part cannons, perriwigs, and feathers. Hudibras.

GA'THERER. n. f. [from gather.]

1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.

I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other men's stuff. Wotton.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.

I was a herdman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit.
Amos.

Nor in that land

Do poisonous herbs deceive the gatherer's hand.
May's Virg.

GA'THERING. n. f. [from gather.] Collection of charitable contributions.

Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatherings when I come. 1 Cor. xvi. 2.

GA'TTEN-TREE. n. f. A species of Cornelian cherry.

GAUDE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain: Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yeilow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks gaurio; and Mr. Lye finds gaude,
in Douglafs, to signify deceit or fraud, from gwarwdio, Welsh, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy; a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure. In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower.]
An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy. It is not now much used.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy;

With

With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gaudes, conceits, Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shakespeare.
The sun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudes,
To give me audience. Shakespeare. King Lear.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shakespeare.
Some bound for Guinea, go'den sand to find,
Bore all the gaudes the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbans finest holland bear. Dryd.
GAUDE. v. a. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.

Go to a gossip's feast, and gaude with me,
After so long grief such nativity. Shakespeare.
GAUDERY. n. f. [from gaude.] Finery;
ostentatious luxury of drefs.

The triumph was not pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Baron's Essays.
Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South.

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tamish'd gaud'ry known. Dryden.

GAUDILY. adv. [from gaudy.] Showily.
GAUDINESS. n. f. [from gaudy.] Showi-ness; tinsel appearance.

GAUDY. adj. [from gaude.] Showy; splendid; pompons; ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not expect in fancy: rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shakespeare.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay notes that people the sun-beams. Milton.
A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.

A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity. Law.

GAUDY. n. f. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast;
a festival; a day of plenty. A word used in the university.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day, that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Cheyne.

GAVE. The preterite of give.

Thou can't not every day give me thy heart;
If thou can't give it, then thou never gav'st it;
Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stays at home, and thou with losing sav'st it. Donne.

GA'VEL. n. f. A provincial word for ground.
Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days. Mort.

GA'VELKIND. n. f. [In law.] A custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death amongst all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places of England, but especially in Kent. Conwell.

Among other Welsh customs he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards, did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind. Davies on Ireland.

GAUGE. v. a. [gauge, jaugé, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced, and often written, gage.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.

2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vanes nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the bird. Derham's Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope.

GAUGE. n. f. [from the verb.] A measure;
a standard.

This plate must be a gage to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth. Locke.

Timothy proposed to his mistress, that she should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gage, by which they were to be measured. Arbutnot.

GAUGER. n. f. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauger, and elcheator. Carew on Cornwall.

GAUNT. adj. [As if gewant, from gepa- man, to lesson, Saxon.] Thin; slender;
lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon
Is my strict fast; I mean my childrens looks;
And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones. Shak. R. II.

Two mastiffs, gaunt and grim, her flight pursu'd,
And oft their fasten'd fangs in blood embu'd. Dryd.

GAUNTLY. adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly;
slenderly; meagerly.

GAUNTLET. n. f. [gantelet, French.] An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the cestus, or boxing glove.

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove his hand. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

Feel but the difference, soft and rough;
This a gauntlet, that a muff. Cleveland.

Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;
The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand,
Oppos'd in combat on the yellow sand. Dryd.

Who naked wrestled best, besmear'd with oil?
Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil. Dryd.

The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light:
View his two gauntlets; these declare
That both his hands were us'd to war. Prior.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,
Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;
He throws the gauntlets Otway us'd to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field. Southern.

GA'VOT. n. f. [gavotte, French.] A kind of dance.

The disposition in a fiddle to play tunes in pre-ludes, sarabands, jigs, and gavots, are real qualities in the instrument. Arbutnot.

GAZE. v. n. [gāzā, or rather gepean, to see, Saxon] To look intently and earnestly; to look with eagerness.

What seest thou there? King Henry's diadem, Inchast'd with all the honours of the world:
If so, gaze on. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

From some she cast her modest eyes below;
At some her gazing glances roving flew. Fairfax.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her. Eccles. ix. 5.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind. Shakespeare.

High stations tumults, but not bliss create;
None think the great unhappy, but the great.

Fools gaze on envy; Envy darts a sting,
Which makes a swain as wretched as a king. Young.

GAZE. v. a. To view stedfastly.

Strait toward heav'n my wond'ring eyes I turn'd,
And gaz'd awhile the ample sky. Milton.

GAZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Intent regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being lighten'd with her beauty's beam,
And thereby fill'd with happy influence,
And lifted up above the world is gaze,
To sing with angels her immortal praise. Spenser.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,
If any air of musick touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,
By the sweet power of musick. Shakespeare.

Not a month
Fore your queen dy'd, she was more worth such gazes. Shakespeare.

Than what you look on now. Shakespeare.

With secret gaze,
Or open admiration, him behold,
On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd Worlds. Milton's Paradise L. 1.

After having stood at gaze before this gate, he discovered an inscription. Addison's Freeholder.

2. The object gazed on.

I must die

Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out;

Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze;

To grind in brazen fetters, under task.

With my heav'n-gifted strength. Milton's Agonist.

GA'ZEL. n. f. An Arabian deer.

GA'ZER. n. f. [from gaze.] He that gazes; One that looks intently with eagerness or admiration.

In her cheeks the vermilion red did shew,

Like roses in a bed of lilies shed;

The which ambrosial odours from them threw

And gazers sense with double pleasure fed. Fairy Q.

I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk. Shaksp.

Bright as the sun, her eyes the gazers strike;

And like the sun, they shine on all alike. Pope.

His learned ideas give him a transcendent delight;

and yet, at the same time, discover the blemishes which the common gazer never observed. Watts

GA'ZEFUL. adj. [gaze and full.] Looking intently.

The brightness of her beauty clear,

The ravish'd hearts of gazeful men might rear

To admiration of that heavenly light. Spenser.

GA'ZEHOUD. n. f. [gaze and bound; canis agasus, Skinner.] A hound that pursues not by the scent, but by the eye.

See'st thou the gazebound! how with glance severe

From the close herd he marks the destin'd deer!

GENERATION. n. f. [from generate, generation. French.]

1. The act of begetting or producing.

Seals make excellent impressions; and so it may be thought of sounds in their first generation: but then the dilation of them, without any new sealing, shews they cannot be impressions. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
He longer will delay, to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep. Milton.

If we deduce the several races of mankind in the several parts of the world from generation, we must imagine the first numbers of them, who in any place agree upon any civil constitutions, to assemble as so many heads of families whom they represent. Temple.

2. A family; a race.
Y'are a dog.
—Thy mother's of my generation: what's she, if I be a dog? Shakespeare's Timon.

quest of Palestine, which with singular virtue they performed, and held that kingdom some few generations. Raleigh's Essays.

5. An age.

By some of the ancients a generation was fixed at an hundred years; by others at an hundred and ten;
by others at thirty-three, thirty, twenty-five, and twenty: but it is remarked, that the continuance of generations is so much longer as they come nearer to the more ancient times. Caimet.

Every where throughout all generations and ages of the Christian world, no church ever perceived the word of God to be against it. Hosker.

GENERATIVE. adj. [generatif, French, from genero, Latin.]

into the reality to the thing engendered. Brown.

GENE'RIC. adj. [generique, French;

GENE'RIC. adj. [from genus, Latin.]

That which comprehends the genus, or distinguishes from another genus, but does not distinguish the species.

The word consumption being applicable to a proper, and improper to a true and bastard consumption, requires a generical description quadrate to both. Harvey on Consumptions.

Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit; yet this is but a general or generick difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry; the specifick difference of wine, therefore, is its pressure from the grape. Watts's Logick.

GENE'RICALLY. adv. [from generick.] With regard to the genus, though not the species.

These have all the essential characters of sea-shells, and shew that they are of the very same specifick gravity with those to which they are so generically allied. Woodward.

GENERO'SITY. n. f. [generosité, French; generositas, Latin.] The quality of being generous; magnanimity; liberality.

Can he be better principled in the grounds of true virtue and generosity than his young tutor is?

With manners generous as his noble blood. Pope.

The gen'rous god who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines. Pope.

His gen'rous spouse, Theano, heav'nly fair,
Nurs'd the young stranger with a mother's care. Pope.

Pray for others in such forms, with such length, importunity, and earnestness, as you use for yourself;
and you will find all little ill-natur'd passions die away, your heart grow great and generous, delighting in the common happiness of others, as you used only to delight in your own. Law.

3. It is used of animals. Spritely; daring; courageous.

So the imperial eagle does not stay
Till the whole carcase he devour.

As if his gen'rous hunger understood
That he can never want plenty of food,

He only sucks the tasteful blood. Cowley.

Aetion spies
His op'ning bounds, and now he hears their cries:

A gen'rous pack. Addison.

4. Liberal; munificent.

When from his vest the young companion bore
The cup the gen'rous landlord own'd before,

And paid profusely with the precious bowl,
The stinted kindness of this churlish soul. Parnel.

Fast by the margin of her native flood,
Whose wealthy waters are well known to fame,

Fair as the bordering flowers the princess flood,
And rich in bounty as the gen'rous stream. Heigh.

5. Strong; vigorous.

ephemerists, that use to pry into the horoscope of nativities. Howel's Vocal Forest.

GENETHLIACKS. n. f. [from γενεθλια.] The science of calculating nativities, or predicting the future events of life from the stars predominant at the birth.

GENETHLIATICK. n. f. [γενεθλια.] He who calculates nativities.

The truth of astrological predictions is not to be referred to the constellations: the genethliaticks conjecture by the disposition, temper, and complexion of the person. Drummond.

GENE'VA. n. f. [A corruption of genevre, French, a juniper-berry.]

We used to keep a distilled spirituous water of Juniper in the shops. At present only a better kind is distilled from the juniper-berry: what is commonly sold is made with no better an ingredient than oil of turpentine, put into the still, with a little common salt and the coarsest spirit. Hill's Mat. Med.

GENIAL. adj. [genialis, Latin.]

1. That which contributes to propagation.

Higher of the genial bed by far,
And with mysterious reverence I deem Creator Venus, genial pow'r of love,

The bliss of men below and gods above! Dryden.

be durable. Boyle.

GENUS. n. f. [Latin.] In science, a class of being, comprehending under it many species: as quadruped is a genus comprehending under it almost all terrestrial beasts.

A general idea is called by the schools genus, and it is one common nature agreeing to several other common natures: so animal is a genus, because it agrees to horse, lion, whale, and butterfly. Watts.

If minerals are not convertible into another species, though of the same genus, much less can they be surmised reducible into a species of another genus.
Harvey on Consumptions.

GEOCENTRICK. adj. [gē and κέντρον; geo-centrique, Fr.] Applied to a planet or orb having the earth for its centre, or the same centre with the earth. Harris.

GEODÆSIA. n. f. [γεωδαισία; geodesie, French.] That part of geometry which contains the doctrine or art of measuring surfaces, and finding the contents of all plain figures. Harris.

GEODÆTICAL. adj. [from geodæsia.] Relating to the art of measuring surfaces;
comprehending or showing the art of measuring land.

GEOGRAPHER. n. f. [gē and γραφω;

geographe, Fr.] One who describes the earth according to the position of its different parts.

A greater part of the earth hath ever been peopled than hath been known or described by geographers.
Brown.

The bay of Naples is called the Crater by the old geographers. Addison.

From sea to sea, from realm to realm I rove,
And grow a meer geographer by love. Tickel.

GEOGRAPHICAL. adj. [geographique, Fr.
from geography.] Relating to geography;
belonging to geography.

GEOGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from geographical.] In a geographical manner; according to the rules of geography.

Minerva lets Ulysses into the knowledge of his country; she geographically describes it to him.
Broome on the Odyssey.

GEOGRAPHY. n. f. [gē and γραφω; geographie, French.] Geography, in a strict sense, signifies the knowledge of the circles of the earthly globe, and the situation of the various parts of the earth.
When it is taken in a little larger sense,
it includes the knowledge of the seas also; and in the largest sense of all, it extends to the various customs, habits, and governments of nations. Watts.

Olympus is extolled by the Greeks as attaining unto heaven; but geography makes slight account hereof, when they discourse of Andes or Teneriff.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

According to ancient fables the Argonauts sailed up the Danube, and from thence passed into the Adriatic, carrying their ships upon their shoulders; a mark of great ignorance in geography. Arbutnot.

GEOLOGY. n. f. [gē and λογω.] The doctrine of the earth; the knowledge of the state and nature of the earth.

GEOMANCER. n. f. [gē and μαντις.] A fortuneteller; a caster of figures; a cheat who pretends to foretel futurity by other means than the astrologer.

Fortunetellers, jugglers, geomancers, and the incantatory impostors, though commonly men of inferior rank, daily delude the vulgar. Brown.

GEOMANCY. n. f. [gē and μαντία.] geomante, French.] The act of casting figures; the act of foretelling by figures what shall happen.

According to some there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyromancy, aeromancy, and geomancy. Ayliffe.

GEOMANTICK. adj. [from geomancy.] Pertaining to the act of casting figures.

Two geomantick figures were display'd
Above his head, a warrior, and a maid;
One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryd.

GEO'METER. n. f. [γεωμέτρης; geometre, Fr.]
One skilled in geometry; a geometrician.
He became one of the chief geometers of his age.
Watts.

GEO'METRICAL. adj. [geometral, French;
from geometry.] Pertaining to geometry.
Dict.

GEOMETRICAL. } adj. [γεωμετρικός; geometrique, French; from geometry.]

1. Pertaining to geometry.

A geometrical scheme is let in by the eyes, but the demonstration is discerned by reason. More.

This mathematical discipline, by the help of geometrical principles doth teach to contrive several powers. Wilkins.

2. Prescribed or laid down by geometry.

Must men take the measure of God just by the same geometrical proportions that he did, that gather'd

ster'd the height and bigness of Hercules by his foot?
Stillington.

Does not this wise philosopher assert,
That the vast orb, which casts so fair his beams,
Is such, or not much bigger than he seems?
That the dimensions of his glorious face
Two geometrick feet do scarce surpass? Blackmore.

3. Disposed according to geometry.

Geometrick Jasper seemeth of affinity with the Lapis sanguinalis described by Boetius; but it is certainly one sort of lapis cruciformis. Grew's Mus.

GEOMETRICALLY. adv. [from geometrical.]

According to the laws of geometry.
'Tis possible geometrically to contrive such an artificial motion as shall be of greater swiftness than the revolutions of the heavens. Wilkins's Math.

All the bones, muscles, and vessels of the body are contrived most geometrically, according to the strictest rules of mechanicks. Ray.

GEOMETRICIAN. n. f. [γεωμετρικός.]

One skilled in geometry; a geometer.
Although there be a certain truth, geometricians would not receive satisfaction without demonstration thereof. Brown.

How easily does an expert geometrician, with one glance of his eye, take in a complicated diagram, made up of many lines and circles! Watts.

• TO GEOMETRIZE. v. a. [γεωμετρίω.]

To act according to the laws of geometry.
We obtained good store of crystals, whose figures were differing enough, though prettily shaped, as if nature had at once affected variety in their figuration, and yet confined herself to geometrize. Boyle.

GEOMETRY. n. f. [γεωμετρία; geometrie, French.]

Originally signifies the art of measuring the earth, or any distances or dimensions on or within it: but it is now used for the science of quantity, extension, or magnitude abstractedly considered, without any regard to matter.

Geometry is usually divided into speculative and practical; the former of which contemplates and treats of the properties of continued quantity abstract-edly; and the latter applies these speculations and theorems to use and practice. Harris.

In the sciences alone there seems to be more geometry than in all the artificial engines in the world.
Ray on the Creation.

Him also for my censor I disdain,
Who thinks all science, as all virtue, vain;
Who counts geometry and numbers toys,
And with his foot the sacred dust destroys. Dryd.

GEOPONICAL. adj. [γῆ and ποῦ; geoponi- que, French.]

Relating to agriculture;
relating to the cultivation of the ground.

Such expressions are frequent in authors geoponical, or such as have treated de rerum rustica. Brown.

GEOPONICKS. n. f. [γῆ and ποῦ.]

The science of cultivating the ground; the doctrine of agriculture.

GEORGE. n. f. [Georgios, Latin.]

1. A figure of St. George on horseback worn by the knights of the garter.
Look on my george, I am a gentleman;
Rate me at what thou wilt. Shakefp. Henry VI.

2. A brown loaf. Of this sense I know not the original.
Cubb'd in a cabin, on a mattrafs laid,
On a brown george, with lowly swobbers, led. Dryd.

GEORGICK. n. f. [γεωργικός; georgiques, Fr.]

Some part of the science of husbandry put into a pleasing dress, and set off with all the beauties and embellishments of poetry. Addison.

GEORGICK. adj. Relating to the doctrine of agriculture.

Here I peruse the Mantuan's georgick strains,
And learn the labours of Italian swains. Gay.

GEOTICK. adj. [from γῆ.] Belonging to the earth; terrestrial. Dict.

GE'CENT. adj. [gerens, Latin.] Carrying; bearing. Dict.

GE'RFALCON. n. f. A bird of prey, in size between a vulture and a hawk, and of the greatest strength next to the eagle. Bailey.

GE'RMAN. n. f. [germain, French; germa- nus, Latin.] Brother; one approaching to a brother in proximity of blood: thus the children of brothers or sisters are called cousins german, the only sense in which the word is now used.

They knew it was their cousin german, the famous Amphialus. Sidney.

And to him said, go now, proud miscreant,
Thyself thy message do to german dear. Fairy Queen.

Wert thou a bear, thou wouldst be kill'd by the horse; wert thou a horse, thou wouldst be seiz'd by the leopard; wert thou a leopard, thou wert german to the lion, and the spots of thy kindred were juices on thy life. Shakespeare's Timon.

You'll have your nephews neigh to you; you'll have coursers for cousins, and genets for germans.
Shakespeare's Othello.

GE'RMAN. adj. [germanus, Latin.] Related. Obsolete.

Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy, and vengeance bitter; but those that are german to him, though removed fifty times, shall come under the hangman. Shakespeare.

GE'RMANDER. n. f. [germandrée, French; chamedrys, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

GE'RMF. n. f. [germen, Latin.] A sprout or shoot; that part which grows and spreads.

Whether it be not made out of the germe, or treadle of the egg, doth seem of lesser doubt. Brown.

GE'RMIN. n. f. [germen, Latin.] A shoot- ing or sprouting seed. Out of use.

Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure
Of nature's germins tumble all together,
Even 'till destruction sicken; answer me
To what I ask you. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Thou all-shaking thunder,
Strike flat the thick rotundity o' the world;
Crack nature's mould, all germins spill at once
That make ungrateful man. Shakefp. King Lear.

TO GE'RMINATE. v. n. [germino, Latin.] To sprout; to shoot; to bud; to put forth.

This action is furthered by the chalcites, which hath within a spirit that will put forth and germinate, as we see in chymical trials. Bacon's Natural Hist.

The seeds of all kinds of vegetables being planted near the surface of the earth, in a convenient soil, amongst matter proper for the formation of vegetables, would germinate, grow up, and replenish the face of the earth. Woodward.

GERMINATION. n. f. [germination, French, from germinate.] The act of sprouting or shooting; growth.

For acceleration of germination, we shall handle the subject of plants generally. Bacon.

The Duke of Buckingham had another kind of germination; and surely, had he been a plant, he would have been reckoned among the sponte na-scentes. Wotton.

There is but little similitude between a terreous humidity and plantal germinations. Glanville.

Suppose the earth should be carried to the great distance of Saturn; there the whole globe would be one frigid zone; there would be no life, no germination. Bantley's Sermons.

GE'RUND. n. f. [gerundium, Latin.] In the Latin grammar, a kind of verbal noun, which governs cases like a verb.

GEST. n. f. [gestum, Latin.]

1. A deed; an action; an achievement.

Who fair them quites, as him beset best,
And goodly can discourse with many a noble gest.
Spenser.

2. Show; representation.

Gests should be interlarded after the Persian manner, by ages, young and old.

3. The roll or journal of the several days, and stages prefixed, in the progresses of our kings, many of them being still extant in the herald's office. [from giste, or gite, French.] Hanner.

I'll give you my commission,
To let him there a month, behind the gest, Prefix'd for's parting. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

4. A stage; so much of a journey as passes without interruption. In all senses ob- solete.

He distinctly sets down the gests and progress
thereof. Brown.

GESTA'TION. n. f. [gestatio, Latin.] The act of bearing the young in the womb.

Aristotle affirmeth the birth of the infant, or time of its gestation, extendeth sometimes unto the eleventh month; but Hippocrates avers that it exceedeth not the tenth. Brown.

Why in viviparous animals, in the time of gestation, should the nourishment be carried to the embryo in the womb, which at other times goeth not that way? Ray on the Creation.

TO GESTICULATE. v. n. [gesticular, La- tin; gesticuler, French.] To play antick tricks; to shew postures. Dict.

GESTICULATION. n. f. [gesticulatio, Lat. gesticulation, French; from gesticulate.] Antick tricks; various postures.

GE'STURE. n. f. [gero, gestum, Latin; geste, French.]

1. Action or posture expressive of sentiment.

Ah, my sister, if you had heard his words, or seen his gestures, when he made me know what and to whom his love was, you would have matched in yourself those two rarely matched together, pity and delight. Sidney.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand;
when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility. Hooker.

To the dumbness of the gesture

One might interpret. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

Humble and reverend gestures in our approaches to God express the inward reverence of our souls.
Duty of Man.

a. Movement of the body.

Grace was in all her steps, heav'n in her eye,
In ev'ry gesture dignity and love! Milton's Par. Lost.
Every one will agree in this, that we ought either to lay aside all kinds of gesture, or at least to make use of such only as are graceful and expressive.
Addison's Spectator.

TO GE'STURE. v. a. [from the noun.] To accompany with action or posture.

Our attire disgraceth it, it is not orderly read, nor gestured as becometh. Hooker.

He undertook so to gesture and muffle up himself in his hood, as the duke's manner was, that none should discern him. Wotton.

TO GET. v. a. pret. I got, anciently gat; part. pass. got, or gotten. [getan, gettan, Saxon.]

1. To procure; to obtain.

Thine be the coffer, well hast thou it got. Spenser.
Of that which was our father's hath he gotten all this glory. Gen. xxxi. 1.

We gat our bread with the peril of our lives.
Sam. v. 9.

David gat him a name when he returned from smiting of the Syrians. 2 Sam. viii. 13.

Most of these things might be more exactly tried by the Torricellian experiments, if we could get tubes so accurately blown that the cavity were perfectly cylindrical. Boyle.

Such a conscience, as has not been wanting to itself, in endeavouring to get the utmost and clearest information about the will of God, that its power, advantages,

advantages, and opportunities could afford it, is that great internal judge, whose abolition is a rational and sure ground of confidence. Soub.

He insensibly got a facility, without perceiving how; and that is attributed wholly to nature, which was much more the effect of use and practice. Locke.

The man who lives upon alms, gets him his set of admirers, and delights in superiority. Addison.

Sphinx was a monster that would eat whatever stranger she could get,

Unless his ready wit discol'd,

The subtle riddle she propos'd. Addison's Whig Ex.

This practice is to be used at first, in order to get a fixed habit of attention, and in some cases only. Watts.

The word get is variously used: we say to get money, to get in, to get off, to get ready, to get a stomach, and to get a cold. Watts.

13. To GET up. To rise from a seat.
14. To remove from a place.
Get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. Numb. xvi.
15. To get, in all its significations, both active and neutral, implies the acquisition of something, or the arrival at some state or place by some means; except in the use of the preterite compound, which often implies mere possession: as, he has got a good estate, does not always mean that he has acquired, but barely that he possesses it. So we say the lady has got black eyes, merely meaning that she has them.
- GETTER. n. s. [from get.]
1. One who procures or obtains.
2. One who begets on a female.
Peace is a very lethargy, a getter of more bastard children than war's a destroyer of men. Shakspeare.
- GETTING. n. s. [from get.]
1. Act of getting; acquisition.
Wisdom is the principal thing, therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding. Prov. iv. 7.
2. Gain; profit.
Who hath a state to repair may not despise small

GHE

- things; and it is less dishonourable to abridge a petty charge than to stoop to petty gettings. Bacon.
The meaner families return a small share of their gettings, to be a portion for the child. Swift.
- GE'WGAW. n. s. [gegar, Saxon; joyau, French.] A showy trifle; a toy; a bauble; a splendid plaything.
That metal they exchanged for the meanest trifles and gewgaws which the others could bring. Abbot.
Prefer that which Providence has pronounced to be the staff of life, before a glittering gewgaw that has no other value than what vanity has set upon it. L'Estrange.
As children, when they throw one toy away, straight a more foolish gewgaw comes in play. Dryden.
A heavy gewgaw, call'd a crown, that spread about his temples, drown'd his narrow head, And would have crush'd it. Dryden's Juvenal.
Some loose the bands Of ancient friendship, cancel nature's laws. For pagantry and tawdry gewgaws. Philips.
The first images were fans, silks, ribbands, laces, and many other gewgaws, which lay so thick that the whole heart was nothing else but a toyshop. Addison's Guardian.
- GE'WGAW. adj. Splendidly trifling; showy without value.
Let him that would learn the happiness of religion, see the poor gewgaw happiness of Feliciania. Law's Serious Call.
- GHA'STFUL. adj. [garr and fulle, Saxon.] Dreary; dismal; melancholy; fit for walking spirits. Obsolete.
Here will I dwell apart,
In ghastful grave, 'till my last sleep
Do close mine eyes;
Help me, ye baneful birds, whose shrieking sound
Is sign of dreary death. Spenser's Pastorals.
- GHA'STINESS. n. s. [from ghastly.] Horror of countenance; resemblance of a ghost; paleness.
- GHA'STLY. adj. [garr, or ghost and like.]
1. Like a ghost; having horror in the countenance; pale; dreadful; dismal.
Why looks your grace so heavily to-day?
—O, I have pass'd a miserable night;
So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams,
So full of dismal terror was the time. Shakspeare.
Envy quickly discovered in court Solymann's changed countenance upon the great bassa, and began now to shew her ghastly face. Knolles.
Death
O'tinn'd horrible, a ghastly smile, to hear
His famine should be fill'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Those departed friends, whom at our late separation we saw disfigured by all the ghastly horrors of death, we shall then see assisting about the majestic throne of Christ, with their once vile bodies transfigured into the likeness of his glorious body, mingling their glad acclamations with the hallelujahs of thrones, principalities and powers. Boyle.
He came, but with such alter'd looks,
So wild, so ghastly, as if some ghost had met him,
All pale and speechless. Dryden's Spanish Friar.
I did not for these ghastly visions send;
Their sudden coming does some ill portend. Dryden.
2. Horrible; shocking; dreadful.
To be less than gods
Disdain'd; but meaner thoughts learn'd in their flight, Mangled with ghastly wounds through plate and mail. Milton.
I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier! Prior.
- GHA'STNESS. n. s. [from garr, Saxon.] Ghastliness; horror of look. Not used.
Look you pale, mistress?
Do you perceive the ghastliness of the eye? Shakspeare.
- GH'ERKIN. n. s. [from gurke, German, a cucumber.] A small pickled cucumber. Skinner.

GIA

- To GHESS. v. n. [See To GUESS. Gheff is by critics considered as the true orthography, but guess has universally prevailed.] To conjecture.
- GHOST. n. s. [garr, Saxon.]
1. The soul of man.
Vex not his ghost: O, let him pass! He hates him, That would upon the rack of this rough world stretch him out longer. Shakspeare's King Lear.
Often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood kept in my soul. Shakspeare's Richard III.
2. A spirit appearing after death.
The mighty ghosts of our great Harrys rose, And armed Edwards look'd with anxious eyes, To see this fleet among unequal foes, By which fate promis'd them their Charles should rise. Dryden.
3. To give up the GHOST. To die; to yield up the spirit into the hands of God.
Their shadows seem
A canopy most fatal, under which
Our army lies ready to give up the ghost. Shakspeare.
4. The third person in the adorable Trinity, called the Holy Ghost.
To GHOST. v. n. [from the noun.] To yield up the ghost; to die. Not in use.
Euryalus taking leave of Lucretia, precipitated her into such a love-fit, that within a few hours she ghosted. Sidney.
- To GHOST. v. a. To haunt with apparitions of departed men. Obsolete.
Julius Caesar
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him. Shakspeare.
- GHO'STLINESS. n. s. [from ghostly.] Spiritual tendency; quality of having reference chiefly to the soul.
- GHO'STLY. adj. [from ghost.]
1. Spiritual; relating to the soul; not carnal; not secular.
Save and defend us from our ghostly enemies. Common Prayer.
Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have, as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind so easily known, but the gifts of God, according to these degrees and times, which he in his secret wisdom seeth meet, are so diversely bestowed; that it seldom appeareth what all receive, what all stand in need of, it seldom lieth hid. Hooker.
The graces of the spirit are much more precious than worldly benefits, and our ghostly evils of greater importance than any harm which the body feelth. Hooker.
To deny me the ghostly comfort of my chaplains, seems a greater barbarity than is ever used by Christians. King Charles.
2. Having a character from religion; spiritual.
Hence will I to my ghostly friar's close cell,
His help to crave, and my dear hap to tell. Shakspeare.
The ghostly father now hath done his thrift. Shakspeare.
- GIALALINA. n. s. [Italian.] Earth of a bright gold colour, found in the kingdom of Naples, very fine, and much valued by painters. Woodward's Met. Foss.
- GIA'MBEUX. n. s. [jamber, French.] Legs, or armour for legs; greaves.
The moral steel dispiteously entail'd,
Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their giambeux fall. Spenser.
- GI'ANT. n. s. [geant, French; gigas, Lat.] A man of size above the ordinary rate of men; a man unnaturally large. It is observable, that the idea of a giant is always associated with pride, brutality, and wickedness.
Now does he feel his axle
Hang loose about him, like a giant's robe
Upon a dwarfish thief. Shakspeare. Macbeth.

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd to high that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without
Good-morrow to the sun. Shaksp. Cymbeline.

Woman's gentle brain
Could not drop forth such giant rude invention;
Such Ethiop words. Shaksp. As you like it.

Fierce faces threat'ning wars,
Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise! Milton.
Those giants, those mighty men, and men of renown, far exceeded the proportion, nature, and strength of those giants remembered by Moses of his own time. Raleigh's History.

The giant brothers, in their camp, have found
I was not forc'd with ease to quit my ground. Dryd.

By weary steps and slow
The groping giant with a trunk of pine Explor'd his way. Addison.

Neptune, by pray'r repentant, rarely wot,
Afflicts the chief to avenge his giant son,
Great Polypheme of more than mortal might. Pope.

GI'ANTESS. n. f. [from giant.] A she-giant; a woman of unnatural bulk and height.

I had rather be a gianteess, and lie under mount Pelion. Shakespeare.

Were this subject to the cedar, she would be able to make head against that huge gianteess. Howel.

GI'ANTLIKE. adj. [from giant and like.] adj.

GI'ANTLY. adj. Gigantick; vast; bulky.
Single courage has often, without romance, overcome giantly difficulties. Decay of Piety.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, which they are deplorably strangers to, and those unanswerable doubts and difficulties, which, over their cups, they pretend to have against Christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the proud man not to adore himself, and I dare undertake that all their giantlike objections against the Christian religion shall presently vanish and quit the field. South.

GI'ANTSHIP. n. f. [from giant.] Quality or character of a giant.

His giantship is gone somewhat crest fallen,
Stalking with less unconscionable strides,
And lower looks. Milton's Agonistes.

GI'BBE. n. f. Any old worn-out animal.
Hanmer.

For who that's but a queen, fair, sober, wise,
Would from a paddock, from a but, a gibbe,
Such dear concernings hide? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

To GI'BBER. v. n. [from jabber.] To speak inarticulately.

The sheeted dead

Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets. Shakesp.

GI'BBERISH. n. f. [Derived by Skinner from galer, French, to cheat; by others conjectured to be formed by corruption from jabber. But as it was anciently written gebrish, it is probably derived from the chymical cant, and originally implied the jargon of Geber and his tribe.]
Cant; the private language of rogues and gipseys; words without meaning.

Some, if they happen to hear an old word, albeit very natural and significant, cry out straightway, that we speak no English, but gibberish.
Spenser.

Some of both sexes writing down a number of letters, just as it came into their heads; upon reading this gibberish, that which the men had wrote sounded like High Dutch, and the other by the women like Italian. Swift.

GI'BBET. n. f. [gibet, French.]

1. A gallows; the post on which malefactors are hanged, or on which their carcases are exposed.

When was there ever cursed atheist brought Unto the gibbet, but he did adore
That blessed pow'r which he had set at nought?
Davies.

You scandal to the flock of verse, a gibbet
Able to bring the gibbet in disgrace. Cleveland.

Haman suffered death himself upon the very gibbet that he had provided for another. L'Estrange.

Papers lay such principles to the Tories, as, if they were true, our next business should be to erect gibbets in every parish, and hang them out of the way. Swift.

2. Any traverse beams.

To GI'BBET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To hang or expose on a gibbet.

I'll gibbet up his name. Oldham.

2. To hang on any thing going traverse:
as the beam of a gibbet.

He shall come off and on swifter than he that gibbets on the brewer's bucket. Shakespeare, Henry IV.

GI'BBIER. n. f. [French.] Game; wild fowl.

These imposters are laid on all butcher's meat, while, at the same time, the fowl and gibbier are tax-free. Addison on Italy.

GIBBOSITY. n. f. [gibbosité, Fr. from gibbour.] Convexity; prominence; protuberance.

When ships, sailing contrary ways, lose the sight one of another, what should take away the sight of ships from each other, but the gibbosity of the in-

GI'BBOUS. adj. [gibbus, Latin; gibbeux,
French.]

1. Convex; protuberant; swelling into inequalities.

The bones will rise, and make a gibbous member.
Wifeman.

A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back.
Dryden.

The sea, by this access and recess, shuffling the empty shells, wears them away, reducing those that are concave and gibbous to a flat. Woodward.

2. Crookbacked.

I demand how the camels of Bactria came to have two bunches on their back, whereas the camels of Arabia have but one? How oxen, in some countries, began and continue gibbous, or haunchbacked? Brown.

GI'BBOUSNESS. n. f. [from gibbous.] Con-vexity; prominence.

To make the convexity of the earth discernible, suppose a man lifted in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon; but then, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbousness would vanish away, and he would only see a great circular flat.
Bentley's Sermons.

GIBCAT. n. f. [gib and cat.] An old worn-out cat.

I am as melancholy as a gibcat, or a lugg'd bear.
Shakespeare.

To GIBE. v. n. [galer, old French, to sneer, to ridicule.] To sneer; to join censoriousness with contempt.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, lest they should afterwards laugh and gibe
at our party. Hooker.

When he saw her toy, and gibe, and geer,
And pals the bounds of modest merry make,
Her dalliance he despis'd. Spenser.

Why that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools. Shak.

Thus with talents well endu'd
To be scurrilous and rude,
When you perty raise your snout,
Flee and gibe, and laugh and flout. Swift.

To GIBE. v. a. To reproach by contemptuous hints; to flout; to scoff; to ridicule; to treat with scorn; to sneer;
to taunt.

When rioting in Alexandria, you Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts
Did gibe my mistress out of audience. Shakespeare.

Draw the beasts as I describe them,
From their features, while I gibe them. Swift.

GIBE. n. f. [from the verb.] Sneer; hint of contempt by word or look; scoff; act or expression of scorn; taunt.

Mark the flocks, the gibes, and notable scorns
That dwell in ev'ry region of his face. Shakespeare.

The rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden.

If they would hate from the bottom of their hearts, their aversion would be too strong for little gibes every moment. Spektor.

But the dean, if this secret should come to his ears,
Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers.
Swift.

GI'BER. n. f. [from gibe.] A sneerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a scoffer; a taunter.

You are well understood to be a more perfect giber of the table, than a necessary bencher of the capitol. Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

He is a giber, add our present business
Is of more serious consequence. Ben Jonson.

GI'BINGLY. adv. [from gibe.] Scornfully;
contemptuously.

His present portance,
Gibingly and ungravelly he did fashion
After th' inveterate hate he bears to you. Shakespeare.

GI'BLETS. n. f. [According to Minshew from gobbet, goblet: according to Junius more properly from gibier, game, Fr.]
The parts of a goose which are cut off before it is roasted.

'Tis holyday; provide me better cheer:
'Tis holyday; and shall be round the year:
Shall I my household gods and genius cheat,
To make him rich who grudges me my meat?
That he may loll at ease; and pamper'd high,
When I am laid, may feed on giblet pie. Dryden.

GI'BSTAFF. n. f.

1. A long staff to gage water, or to shove forth a vessel into the deep.

2. A weapon used formerly to fight beasts upon the stage. Dick.

GI'DDILY. adv. [from giddy.]

1. With the head seeming to turn round.

2. Inconstantly; unsteadily.

To roam

Giddily, and be every where but at home,
Such freedom doth a banishment become. Donne.

3. Carelessly; heedlessly; negligently.

The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her,
Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune. Shakesp.

GI'DDINESS. n. f. [from giddy.]

1. The state of being giddy or vertiginous; the sensation which we have when every thing seems to turn round.

Megrimms and giddiness are rather when we rise
after long sitting, than while we sit. Bacon.

This blessed thistle, which is so sovereign a medicine against the giddiness of the brain; 'tis this will settle it. Holyday.

Vain show and noise intoxicate the brain,
Begin with giddiness, and end in pain. Young.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness; mutability;
changeableness.

There be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief. Bacon.

3. Quick rotation; inability to keep its place.

The indignation of Heaven rolling and turning us, 'till at length such a giddiness seized upon government, that it fell into the very dregs of sectaries.
South.

4. Frolick; wantonness of life.

Thou, like a contrite penitent,
Charitably warn'd of thy sins, do'st repent
These vanities and giddinesses. Donne.

GI'DDY. adj. [gibig, Saxon. I know not whether this word may not come from gad, to wander, to be in motion, gad, gid, giddy.]

1. Vertiginous; having in the head, a whirl, or sensation of circular motion; such as happens by disease or drunkenness.

Them rev'ling thus the Tentyrites invade,
By giddy heads and flagg'ring legs betray'd. Tate.

2. Rotatory; whirling; running round with celerity.

As Ixion fix'd, the wretch shall feel
The giddy motion of the whirling mill. Pope.

3. Inconstant; mutable; unsteady; change-ful.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,
Than women's are. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
It may be gnats and flies have their imagination more mutable and giddy, as small birds likewise have. Bacon.

Thanks to giddy chance, which never bears,
That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
She cast us headlong from our high estate,
And here in hope of thy return we wait. Dryden.

The giddy vulgar, as their fancies guide,
With noise lay nothing, and in parts divide. Dryden.
You are as giddy and volatile as ever, the reverse of Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life.

Swift to Gay.

4. That which causes giddiness.

The frequent errors of a pathless wood,
The giddy precipice, and the dang'rous flood. Prior.
Thesylphs through myttick mazes guide their way,
Through all the giddy circle they pursue. Pope.

5. Heedless; thoughtless; uncautious; wild.

Too many giddy foolish hours are gone.
And in fantastick measures danc'd away. Rowe.
How inexcusable are those giddy creatures, who,
in the same hour, leap from a parent's window to a husband's bed. Clarissa.

6. Tottering; unfix'd.

As we pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches, Methought that Glo'ster stumbled. Shakespeare.

7. Intoxicated; elated to thoughtlessness; overcome by any overpowering inticement.

Art thou not giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion. Shakespeare.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes;
Hearing applause and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, gazing still in doubt,
Whether those peals of praise be his or no. Shakespeare.

To GIDDY. v. n. [from the noun.] To turn quick. Obsolete.

A fadaine North-wind fetcht,
With an extreme sea, quite about againe,
Our whole endeavours; and our course constrain
To giddie round. Chapman.

GIDDYBRAINED. adj. [giddy and brain.] Careless; thoughtless.

Turn him out again, you unnecessary, useless, giddybrained as! Orway's Venice preserved.

GIDDYHEADED. adj. [giddy and head.] Without thought or caution; without steadiness or constancy.

And sooner may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme descry
What fashion'd hats or ruffs, or suits, next year,
Our giddy-headed antick youth will wear. Donne.

That men are so misaffected, melancholy, giddy-headed, hear the testimony of Solomon. Burton.

GIDDYPACED. adj. [giddy and pace.] Moving without regularity.

More than light airs, and recollected terms,
Of these most brisk and giddypaced times. Shakespeare.

GIER-EAGLE. n. s. [sometimes it is written jer-eagle.] An eagle of a particular kind.

These fowls shall not be eaten, the swan and the pelican, and the gier-eagle. Lev. xi. 18.

GIFT. n. s. [from give.]

1. A thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.

VOL. I.

They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh. Mat. ii. 11.

Recall your gift, for I your pow'r confess;
But first take back my life, a gift that's less. Dryd.

2. The act of giving.

Creator bounteous, and benign,
Giver of all things good, but fairest this
Of all thy gifts, nor envyest. Milton.
Thee all things living gaze on, all things thine
By gift. Milton.

3. The right or power of bestowing.

They cannot give;
For had the gift been theirs, it had not here
Thus grown. Milton.
No man has any antecedent right or claim to that which comes to him by free gift. South.

4. Oblation; offering.

Many nations shall come with gifts in their hands, even gifts to the king of heaven. Job. xiii. 21.

5. A bribe.

Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise. Deut. xvi. 19.

6. Power; faculty.

And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift. Shakespeare.
She was lovely to attract

Thy love, not thy subjection, and her gifts
Were such as made for government well seem'd Unseemly to bear rule. Milton.

He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with any thing that gives him an opportunity of exerting his talent. Addison.

GIFTED. adj. [from gift.]

1. Given; bestowed.

Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze,
To grind in brazen fetters, under task,
With my heav'n gifted strength. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Endowed with extraordinary powers. It is commonly used ironically.

Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppinger, got up into a pease-cart, and harangued
the people to dispose them to an insurrection. Dryd.

There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence, to those who have it not under command: women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory.

Addison's Freeholder.

GIG. n. s. [Etymology uncertain.]

1. Any thing that is whirled round in play.

Playthings, as tops, gigs, battledores, should be procured them. Locke.

2. [Gigia, Islandick.] A fiddle. Now out of use.

GIGANTICK. adj. [gigantes, Latin.] Suit-able to a giant; big; bulky; enormous; likewise wicked; atrocious.

Others from the wall defend
With dart and jav'lin, stones, and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and giantick deeds. Milton.

I dread him not, nor all his giant brood,
Though fame divulged him father of five sons,
All of giantick size, Goliath chief. Milton's Agon.

The son of Hercules he justly seems,
By his broad shoulders and giantick limbs. Dryd.
The Cyclopean race in arms arose;
A lawless nation of giantick foes. Pope's Odyssey.

To GIGGLE. v. n. [gichelen, Dutch.] To laugh idly; to titter; to grin with merry levity. It is retained in Scotland.

We shew our present joking giggling race;
True joy consists in gravity and grace. Garrick's Ep.

GIGGLER. n. s. [from giggle.] A laughter; a titterer; one idly and foolishly merry.

A sad wife valour is the brave complexion,
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The giggler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or the fir'd beacon, frighteth from his ditties.

Herbert.

GIGLET. n. s. [geazl, Saxon; geyl, Dutch; gillet, Scottish, is still retained.] A wanton; a lascivious girl. Now out of use.

Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillage of a giglet wench. Shakesp.

The fam'd Cassibelan was once at point,
Oh giglet fortune! to master Cæsar's sword. Shak.

Away with those giglets too, and with the other confederate companion. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.
GI'GOT. n. s. [French.] The hip joint,
It seems to mean in Chapman a joint for the spit.

The inwards slit,
They broil'd on coales, and ate; the rest, in giglets cut, they split. Chapman.

To GILD. v. a. pret. gilded, or gilt. [gilban, Saxon.]

1. To wash over with gold; to cover with foliated gold.

The room was large and wide,
As it some gilt or solemn temple were:
Many great golden pillars did uprear
The massy roof. Spenser.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lilly,
To throw a perfume on the violet.

And the gilded car of day
His glowing axle doth allay

In the steep Atlantick stream. Milton.

Purchasing riches with our time and care,
We lose our freedom in a gilded snare. Rosecommon.

When Britain, looking with a just disdain
Upon this gilded majesty of Spain,

And knowing well that empire must decline,
Whose chief support and sinews are of coin. Waller.

Her joy in gilded chariots when alive;
And love of ombre after death survive. Pope.

2. To colour with any yellow matter.

Thou did'st drink

The stale of horses and the gilded puddle,
Which beasts would cough at, Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

3. To adorn with lustre.

No more the rising sun shall gild the morn,
Nor ev'ning Cynthia till her silver horn. Pope's Mef.

4. To brighten; to illuminate.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul.

South.

5. To recommend by adventitious orna-ments.

For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have. Shakesp.

Yet, oh! th' imperfect piece moves more delight:
'Tis gilded o'er with youth, to catch the sight. Dryd.

GILDER. n. s. [from gild.]

1. One who lays gold on the surface of any other body.

Gilders use to have a piece of gold in their mouth,
to draw the spirits of the quicksilver. Bacon.

We have here a gilder with his anvil and hammer. Broome.

2. A coin, from one shilling and six pence, to two shillings.

I am bound

To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shakesp.

GILDING. n. s. [from gilt.] Gold lain on any surface by way of ornament.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit. Bacon.

The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint.

Addison on Italy.

Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry'r engage,
And I not strip the gilding off a knave,

Unplac'd unpension'd, no man's heir or slave?

Pope.

GILL. n. s. [agulla, Spanish; gula, Latin.]

1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.

The leviathan,
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land, and at his gills

Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea. Milton.

Fishes perform respiration under water by the gills.

He hath two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as in most fishes, but before them. Walton.

Till

G I M

- 'Till they of farther passage quite bereft,
Were in the mesh with gills entangl'd left. King.
2. The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.
The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less. Bacon's Natural History.
3. The flesh under the chin.
In many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the sending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge. Bacon's Natural History.
Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont. Swift.
4. [Gilla, barbarous Latin.] A measure of liquids, containing the fourth part of a pint.
Every bottle must be rinsed with wine: some, out of mistaken thrift, will rinse a dozen with the same: change the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough. Swift.
5. A kind of measure among the tinner.
They measure their block-tin by the gill, which containeth a pint. Carew.
6. In the northern counties it is half a pint of liquid measure.
7. [From gillian, the old English way of writing Julian, or Juliana.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language.
I can, for I will,
Here at Burley o' th' Hill,
Give you all your fill,
Each Jack with his Gill. Ben Jonson's Gypsies.

- GIM. adj. [An old word.] Neat; spruce; well dressed.
- GI'MCRACK. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine.] A slight or trivial mechanism.
For though these gimcracks were away,
However, more reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,
The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.
What's the meaning of all these tangrams and

G I N

- gimcracks*? Jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbutnot.
- GI'MLET. n. f. [giblet, guimbelet, French.]
A horer with a screw at its point.
The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit. Maxon.
- GI'MMAL. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner and Ainsworth to be derived from gimellus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical. Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.] Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery. Hammer.
I think by some odd gimmals or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out so as they do. Shakefp.
- GI'MMER. n. f. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.
The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magick. Moore's Divine Dialogues.
- GIMP. n. f. [See GIM. Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.] A kind of silk twist or lace.
- GIN. n. f. [from engine.]
1. A trap; a snare.
As the day begins,
With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
And pastime make. Sidney.
Which two, through treason and deceitful gin, Hath slain Sir Mordant. Spenser.
So strives the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the coney struggle in the net. Shakefp.
Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty. Shakefp.
If those, who have but sense, can thus
The engines that have them annoy'd?
Little for me had reason done,
If I could not thy gins avoid. Ben Jonson's Forest.
I know thy trains,
Thou dearly to my coil, thy gins and toils;
No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd. Milton.
- He made a planetary gin,
Which rats would run their own heads in,
And come on purpose to be taken,
Without th' expence of cheese and bacon. Hudibras.
Keep from slaying scourge thy skin,
And ancle free from iron gin. Hudibras.
2. Any thing moved with screws, as an engine of torture, Typhæus' joints were stretched on a gin. Spenser.
3. A pump worked by rotatory sails.
The delis would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adits or soughs to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray.
A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water drivelling on the outside of the gin, pump of Mostyn coalpits. Woodward on Fossils.
4. [Contracted from GENEVA, which see.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper berries.
This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope.
And answer ginshops sorer sighs return. Pope.
- GI'NGER. n. f. [zinziber, Latin; gingero, Italian.]
The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the Iris: these are produced in the head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds. Miller.
The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromatick, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves. Hill.

G I P

- Or wasting ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow. Pope.
- GI'NGERBREAD. n. f. [ginger and bread.]
A kind of farineous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweated with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromatick seeds. It is sometimes gilt.
An' I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread. Shakespeare.
Her currants there and gooseberries were spread,
With the enticing gold of gingerbread. King's Cook.
'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.
- GI'NOERLY. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously; nicely.
What is't that you Took up so gingerly? Shakespeare.
- GI'NGERNESS. n. f. Niceness; tenderness. Dict.
- GI'NGIVAL. adj. [gingiva Latin.] Belonging to the gums.
Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlude appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of perviousness. Holder's Elements of Speech.
- To GI'NGLE. v. n.
1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.
The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence found. Gay.
Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And gingling down the backstairs, told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope's Epistles.
2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.
- To GI'NGLE. v. a. To shake, so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.
Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.
- GI'NGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A shrill resounding noise.
2. Affectation in the sound of periods.
- GI'NGLYMOID. adj. [γινγλυμοειδής, a hinge, and ειδής.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.
The Malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint. Haller.
- GI'NGLYMUS. n. f. A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, in the manner of a hinge, of which the elbow is an instance. Wifeman.
- GI'NNET. n. f. [γιννέτις.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish gennet, improperly written for ginnet.
- GI'NSENG. n. f. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent. It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times its weight in silver. Hill.
- To GIP. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.
- GI'PSY. n. f. [Corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe, they declared, and perhaps, truly, that they they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]

1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour.

A frantick gipsy now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants.

In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;
A figul in his hand the gipsy bears,
In th' other a prophetick lieve and shears.
I, near yon stile, three fallow gipsies met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to her lady, was but a kitchen-wench;
Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero
hildings and harlots.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gipsy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her.
A slave I am to Clara's eyes:
The gipsy knows her power, and flies.

- GI'RSOLE. n. f. [girafol, French.]

1. The herb turnsole.

2. The opal stone.

- To GIRD. v. a. pret. girded, or girt.
[gynban, Saxon.]

1. To bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth.

2. To put on so as to surround or bind.

Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck.

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him.

My bow and thunder, my almighty arms
Gird on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And, at the head of our remaining troops,
Attack the foe.

The combatant too late the field declines,
When now the sword is girded to his loins.

4. To invest.

Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;
And in requerdon of that duty done,
I gird thee with the valiant sword of York.

The son appear'd,
Girt with omnipotence.

5. To dress; to habit; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk.

Typhoeus there keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way.

6. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together sow'd,
To gird their waist: vain covering, if to hide
Their guilt, and dreaded shame!

7. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles.

8. To inclose; to incircle.

That Nyseian isle,
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham
Hid Amalthea, and her florid son
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye.

9. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the god.

- To GIRD. v. n. [Of this word in this sense I know not the original; it may be formed by a very customary transposition from gird or cut. To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to sneer.

This wondrous error growth
At which our critics gird.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men.

GIRD. n. f. [from the verb.] A twitch; a pang: it may come from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly. This word is now seldom used, unless the former etymology be admitted.

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird:
For shame, my lord of Winchester, relent.

Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the Atheist feels.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and girds of it when he doth amiss.

GIRDER. n. f. [from gird.] In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girder need not be so strong as the front girder.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vast in order join'd.

GIRDLE. n. f. [gynbe, Saxon.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle,
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle.

Many conceive there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdle.

On him his mantle, girdle, sword and bow,
On him his heart and soul he did bestow.

2. Enclosure; circumference.

Suppose within the girdle of these walls
Are now confin'd two mighty monarchies.

3. The zodiack.

1. To gird; to bind as with a girdle.

Lay the gentle babes, girdling one another
Within their innocent alabaster arms.

2. To inclose; to shut in; to environ.

Those sleeping stones,
That as a waist do girdle you about.

Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdlest in those wolves!

GIRDLEBELT. n. f. [girdle and belt.] The belt that incircles the waist.

Nor did his eyes less longingly behold
The girdlebelt, with nails of burnish'd gold.

GIRDLER. n. f. [from girdle.] A maker of girdles.

GIRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL. n. f. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Merie Casanbon, as is his custom, derives it from agen of the same signification; Minsheu from garrula, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from herlodes, Welsh, from which, says he, harlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceopl for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found.

Dr. Hicke

derives it most probably from the Islandick karlinna, a woman.] A young woman, or female child.

In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl.

I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl.

The foole Amphimachus, to field brought gold to be his wracke,

Proude girl like, that doth ever beare her dowre upon her backe.

A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every girl to practise on.

Tragedy should blush as much to stoop
To the low mimick follies of a farce,
As a grave matron would to dance with girls.

A boy, like thee, would make a kingly line;
But oh! a girl, like her, must be divine!

GIRLISH. adj. [from girl.] Suiting a girl; youthful.

In her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor.

GIRLISHLY. adv. [from girlish.] In a girlish manner.

To GIRN. v. n. It seems to be a corruption of grin. It is still used in Scotland, and is applied to a crabbed, captious, or peevish person.

GIRROCK. n. f. [acns major.] A kind of fish.

GIRT. part. pass. [from To gird.]

To GIRT. v. a. [from gird.] To gird; to encompass; to encircle. Not proper.

In the dread ocean, undulating wide
Beneath the radiant line that girts the globe.

GIRT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A band by which the saddle or burthen is fixed upon the horse.

Here lies old Hobson, death hath broke his girt;
And heve, alas! hath laid him in the dirt.

2. A circular bandage.

The most common way of bandage is by that of the girt, which girt hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends are tacked firmly together.

GIRTH. n. f. [from gird.]

1. A band by which the saddle is fixed upon the horse.

Or the saddle turn'd round, or the girths brake;
For low on the ground, woe for his sake,
The law is found.

Nor Pegasus could bear the load,
Along the high celestial road;
The ite'd oppress'd, would break his girth,
To raise the lumber from the earth.

Mordanto gallops on alone;
The roads are with his foll'wers strown;
This breaks a girth, and that a bone.

2. The compass measured by the girdle, or enclosing bandage.

He's a lusty jolly fellow that lives well, at least three yards in the girth.

To GIRTH. v. a. To bind with a girth.

To GISE Ground. v. a. Is when the owner of it does not feed it with his own stock, but takes in other cattle to graze.

GI'SLE. Among the English Saxons, signifies a pledge: thus, Fredgisle is a pledge of peace; Gislebert an illustrious pledge, like the Greek Homerus.

GITH. n. f. [nigilla.] An herb called Guinea pepper.

To GIVE. v. a. preter. gave; part. pass. given. [gifen, Saxon.]

1. To bestow; to confer without any price or reward; not to sell.

I had a master that gave me all I could ask, but thought fit to take one thing from me again.

Constant at church and change; his gains were sure.

His givings rare, save farthings to the poor.

chiefly a discourse of his own voyage. Hakewill.

GLAND. n. f. [glans, Latin; gland, Fr.]

All the glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass in, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands and testes. A conglom-erate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.

The abscess begun deep in the body of the glands.

Wifeman.

The glands, which o'er the body spread,

Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,

Involv'd and twisted with th' arterial duct,

The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackmore.

GLANDERS. n. f. [from gland.] In a horse is the running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green, or black.

unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous

tumours, and ruptures of the lymphaticks. Arbuth.

To GLARE. v. n. [glaren, Dutch.]

1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the light confused. Bacon.

His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell,

And like the brand of foul Alesto flame. Fairfax.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit, and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not;

and is stately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cacus stands reveal'd to fight;

The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden.

Alas, thy dazzled eye

Beholds this man in a false glaring light,

Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addison.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,

Which thou dost glare with. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Look, how pale he glares! Shakesp. Hamlet.

Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;

But when they met they made a surly stand,

And glar'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd,

And wish'd that ev'ry look might be their last. Dryd.

3. To shine ostentatiously, or with too much laboured lustre.

The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest, or most correct. Felton on the Classics.

To GLARE. v. a. To shoot such splendour

as the eye cannot bear.

One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye

Glaz'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire

Among th' accurs'd, that wither'd all their strength. Milton.

GLARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.

The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare

From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryd. Fab.

I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flam-beaux. Addison's Guardian.

Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,
And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,
She sighs for ever. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

2. A fierce piercing look.

About them round

A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milton.

GLAREOUS. adj. [gluireux, Fr. glareosus, Latin; from glair.] Consisting of vis-cous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

GLARING. adj. Applied to any thing notorious: as, a glaring crime.

GLASS. n. f. [glær, Saxon; glas, Dutch, as Pexon imagines, from gläs, British, green. In Erse it is called klánn, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency.]

1. An artificial substance made by fusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glafs, from the verb glansen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles. Peacham on Drawing.

Glass is thought so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of so close a texture that the subtlest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.

Show'rs of grenadoes rain, by sudden burst

Dislodging murr'ous bowels, fragments of steel

And stones, and glass and nitrous gain adust. Philips.

2. A glass vessel of any kind.

I'll see no more

And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass

Which shews me many more. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. A looking-glass; a mirror.

He was the mark and glass, copy and book,

That fashion'd others. Shakesp. Henry IV.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,

With tinkling glisses, to betray

The larks that in the meshes light. Dryd. Horace.

4. An Hour GLASS. A glass used in measuring time by the flux of sand.

Were my wife's liver

Infected as her life, she would not live

The running of one glass. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

5. The destined time of man's life.

No more his royal self did live, no more his noble

sonne,

The golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run. Chapman.

6. A cup of glass used to drink in.

To this last costly treaty,

That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass

Did break i' th' rinsing. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

When thy heart

Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul

Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, be sure

'Tis time to shun it. Philips.

7. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.

While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

The first glass may pass for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

8. A perspective glass.

The moon whose orb

Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views. Mik.

Like those who survey the moon by glasses, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. Dryden.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.

Get thee glass eyes.

And, like a scurvy politician, seems
To see the things thou do'st not. Shak. King Lear.
Glass bottles are more fit for this second fining than those of wood. Mortimer's Husbandry.
To GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirror. Not in use.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney.
2. To case in glass.

Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;
Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence they were glaz'd.

Did point out to buy them, along as you pass. Shak.
3. To cover with glass; to glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glaz'd over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLASSFURNACE. n. f. [glass and furnace.]
A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass-furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLASSGAZING. adj. [glass and gazing.]
Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.

A whorson, glassgazing, finical rogue. Shakesp.

GLASSGRINDER. n. f. [glass and grinder.]
One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.

The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLASSHOUSE. n. f. [glass and house.] A house where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses. Addison.

GLASSMAN. n. f. [glass and man.] One who sells glass.

The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman. Swift.

GLASSMETAL. n. f. [glass and metal.]
Glass in fusion.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GLASSWORK. n. f. [glass and work.] Manufacture of glass.

The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks. Bacon's Natural History.

GLASSWORT. n. f. [salicornia, or saltwork.]

It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves; these embryos afterward become pods or bladders, which, for the most part, contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of Summer; and, having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, by the chymists. Miller.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd
His glassy essence; like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastick tricks before high heav'n,
As make the angels weep. Shak. Meas. for Meas.
There is a willow grows aslant a brook,
That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream.

Shakespeare.
The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing dust. Brown.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred
The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head? Sandys.
The glassy deep. Dryden's Æn.

GLASTONBURY THORN. n. f. A species of MEDLAR.

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in Winter, and flowers again in the Spring.
Miller.

GLAUCOMA. n. f. [γλαύκωμα; glaucome,
Fr.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.

The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract.
Sharp.

GLAIVE. n. f. [glaiue, French; glais, a hook, Welsh.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,
Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,
But each a glave hath pendant by his side. Fairfax.

When zeal with aged clubs and glaves,
Gave chase to rockets and white staves. Hudibras.

To GLAVER. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; glipan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheddle. A low word.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glavering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician. L'Estrange.

To GLAZE. v. a. [To glass, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glaz'd with crystalline glass.

Bacon's Essays.
2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glaise
argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellicid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with brining tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shakesp.
The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it sound reason that carries the stroke home. Grew's Cosm. Sac.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life,
the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden's Duressoy.

GLAZIER. n. f. [corrupted from glazier, or glassier, of glass.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set,
and fastened by the glazier. Moxon's Mech. Ex.

The dextrous glazier strong returns the bound,
And jingling fashes on the penthouse sound. Gay.
And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part. Harte.

GLEAM. n. f. [geloma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;

And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise L. st.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast. Dryden.
We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,

And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addison.
In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green.

Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams,
Fires that glow. Pope's St. Cecilia.

To GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden coruscation.

Observant of approaching day,
The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled East. Thomson.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees.

Thomson.
GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flushing;
darting sudden coruscations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way.

Pope.
To GLEAN. v. a. [glaner, French, as Skinner thinks, from granum, Lat.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers.

Ruth ii.
Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;
He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd.

Dryden.
The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself. Nelson.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palamon's fields. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather
So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shak.
That goodness

Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, Cardinal, by extortion. Shak.
They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. Judges, xx. 45.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his refulgent arms flash'd through the shady plain,

Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear. Dryden's Æn.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments;
since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron. Dryden's Virgil.

GLEANER. n. f. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thomson.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arraught statesman. Locke.

GLEANNING.

GLEANNING. n. s. [from gleann.] The act of gleanning, or thing gleanned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleanning of grapes when the vintage is done.

Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleannings of the rich man's harvest.

Apostle.

GLEBE. n. s. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in ledgy bowers,

The grassy garlands loved, and oft air'd with flowers
Of rank and mellow glebe.

Dryden.

Fertile of corn the glebe of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills.

Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,

The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,

Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain.

Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,

Thill the glad summons of a genial ray

Umbuds the glebe, and bolls them out to day.

Carib.

2. The land possessed as a part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called The glebe; another in tithes, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people.

Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe.

Swift.

GLEBOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy.

Ditt.

GLEBY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flatt'ry! thy malignant seeds

In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand

Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's glib land,

With rising pride amidst the corn appear,

And choke the hopes and harvest of the year.

Prior.

GLEDE. n. s. [gluaglide, Saxon.] A kind of hawk.

Ye shall not eat the glade, the kite, and the vulture.

Deut.

GLEE. n. s. [gligge, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gayety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee.

Fairy Queen.

Many wayfarers make themselves glee, by veiling the inhabitants; who again foretell not to beign them with perfume.

Cervus.

Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewell my glee!

No happiness is now reserved for me.

Gay.

The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;

Each barley-head untaxt, and day-light free.

Harte.

GLEED. n. s. [from glopan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLEEFUL. adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?

Shakespeare.

GLEEK. n. s. [gligga, Saxon.] Musick, or musician.

VOL. I.

What will you give us?—No money, but the glee: I will give you the minstrel.

Shakespeare.

TO GLENN. v. n. [glu, Saxon, in Saxon, is a mimic or a droll.]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.

I can glee upon occasion.

Shakespeare.

I have seen you gleeing or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.

Shakespeare.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimicry or drollery.

TO GLEEN. v. n. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with glam. I have not remarked it in any other place.

Those who labour

The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,

Bend Rubbush steel, and harden gleening armour,

Acknowledge Vulcan's aid.

Prior.

GLEET. n. s. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from gluban, Saxon, to run softly.] A sanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a sore.

A hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet.

Wise man's Surg.

TO GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin sanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops.

Wise man.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, till they hit against the mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a basin.

Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

GLETTY. adj. [from gleet.] Ichory; thinly sanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gletty, you may suspect it corrupting.

Wise man.

GLEEN. n. s. [gleann, Erse.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is hant,

And wooes the widow's daughter of the glen.

Spenser.

GLEW. n. s. [gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

GLIB. adj. [from glu, Skinner.]

1. Smooth, slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them; the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them.

Byrne's Theory.

Habbakuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together with a poole that slip as glib as a birdcatcher's gin.

Arbutnot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and oily art

To speak and purpose not, since what I say is heard.

I'll do't before I speak.

There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains

Three gentile tomes of Swift's remains

And then, to make them pass the press

Revis'd by Tibbald, More, and Cabbot.

Swift.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man

Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran.

Swift.

GLIB. n. s.

The Irish have from the Soyuzant Habbakuk and long glib, which is a thick curled host of hair hanging down over their eyes, and occasionally disguising them.

Spenser on Trehand.

TO GLIB. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

Ill geld them all: fourteen they shall not see.

To bring false generations; they are cohorts.

And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.

Shakespeare.

GLIBLY. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as conscience recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction.

Government of the Tongue.

GLIBNESS. n. s. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enslead

The rock.

Chapman's Odyssey.

The tongue is the most ready for motion in any member, needs not so much as the stature of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving.

Government of the Tongue.

TO GLIDE. v. n. [gliban, Saxon; gliden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By East, among the dusty vallies glide

The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood.

Faust.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,

In double stream, the briny waters glide.

Dryden.

Just before the confines of the wood,

The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood.

Dryden.

Where stray the Muses, in what lawn of grove

In those fair fields where sacred Isis glides,

Or else where Cam his winding vales divides.

Pope.

2. To pass on without change of step.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate

The mystick wonders of your silent state.

Dryden.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

If one of mean affairs

May plod it in a week, why may not I

Glide thither in a day?

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,

Glide under the green wave.

Milton.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a smart

As if cold steel had glided through his heart.

Dryden's Fables.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear.

Dryden.

GLIDE. n. s. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,

Seeing Orlando, it unlinked itself,

And with indented glides did slip away

Into a bush.

Shakespeare's As you like it.

GLIDER. n. s. [from glide.] One that glides.

The glance into the heart did glide;

Hey ho the glider;

Therewith my soul was sharply gride,

Such wounds soon waxen wider.

Such wounds soon waxen wider.

Spenser's Pastoral.

GLIKE. n. s. [glig, Saxon. See GLEEK.]

A sneer; a scoff; a flout. Not now in use.

Where's the bastard's braves, and Charles his glie.

Shakespeare.

TO GLIMMER. v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glintmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. To shine faintly.

The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day.

The truth appears so naked on my side,

That any purblind eye may find it out.

—And on my side it is so well apparel'd;

So clear, so shining, and so evident,

That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye.

Shakespeare.

For

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray Glimmers upon the pure and native day. Cowley.
Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her. Milton.
See'st thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames Casts pale and dreadful? Milton's Paradise Lost.
The sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of Heav'n
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length began to roll;
The rising motion of an infant ray,
Shot glimmering through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.
Oft by the winds, extinct the signal lies;
Or smother'd in the glimm'ring socket dies. Gay's Trivia.
When rosy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,
He drove to pasture all the lusty males. Pope.
2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.
On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at Court, got a glimmering who they were. Wotton.
The Pagan priesthood was always in the druids; and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted. Swift.
GLIMMER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Faint splendour; weak light.
2. A kind of fossil.
The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica and glimmer. Woodward on Fossils.
Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible, and elastic: tale, catiliver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward.
GLIMPSE. n. f. [glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]
1. A weak faint light.
Such vast room in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them. Milton.
Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our short-sighted reason having got some faint glimpse of, we, in the dark, grope after. Locke.
2. A quick flashing light.
Light as the lightning glimpse they ran. Milton.
My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires;
My Manhood, long misled by wand'ring fires,
Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,
My pride struck out new spangles of her own. Dryden.
3. Transitory lustre.
There no dear glimpse of the sun's lovely face
Strikes through the solid darkness of the place. Cowley.
If I, celestial fire, in aught
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryden.
4. Short fleeting enjoyment.
If while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisf'd with life, afraid of death,
It haply be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great fire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.
5. A short transitory view.
O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade. Milton.
Sometimes God punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might have a taste or glimpse of his present justice. Hakewill.
A man used to such sort of reflections sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden.
6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.
No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of. Shakespeare.
To GLISTEN. v. n. [glittan, German.]
To shine; to sparkle with light.
The bleating kind
Eye the bleak heaven, and next the glistening earth,
With looks of dumb despair. Tompson's Winter.
The ladies eyes glistened with pleasure. Richardson's Pamela.
To GLISTER. v. n. [glitteren, Dutch.] To shine; to be bright.
The wars flame most in Summer, and the helmets glister brightest in the fairest sunshine. Spenser.
'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare.
The golden sun
Gallops the zodiac in his glistering coach. Shakespeare.
All that glitters is not gold.
You were more the eye, and talk
Of the court to-day than all Else that glister'd in Whitehall. Ben Jonson.
When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brass, the mountains glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. Mac. vi. 39.
It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant redish colour, and glistered prettily. Boyle.
GLISTER. n. f. [Properly written clyster, from κλύω.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong even by Brown.
Now enters Bush with new state airs,
His lordship's premier minister;
And who, in all profound affairs,
Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.
Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which, descending daily unto the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion. Brown.
To GLITTER. v. n. [glittian, Saxon.]
1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.
Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade. Bacon's Phys. Rem.
Before the battle joins from far
The field yet glitters with the pomp of war. Dryden's Virgil.
Scarce had'st thou time to unsheath thy conqu'ring blade;
It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Granville.
2. To be specious; to be striking.
On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it. Decay of Piety.
In glitt'ring scenes, o'er her own heart severe;
In crowds collected; and in courts sincere. Young.
GLITTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Lustre;
bright show; splendour.
Clad
With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton.
Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in it. Collier on Pride.
Take away this measure from our dress and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Law.
GLITTERAND. Shining; sparkling. A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.
GLITTERINGLY. adv. [from glitter.]
With shining lustre.

1. To squint; to look askew. Skinner.
2. In Scotland, to stare: as what a gloarand yean.

To GLOAR. v. n. [This word I conceive to be ignorantly written for gloar.] To cast side glances as a timorous lover.
Teach every grace to smile in your behalf.
And her deluding eyes to gloar for you. Roué.
GLOBARD. n. f. [from glow.] A glow-worm.
GLOBATED. adj. [from globe.] Formed in shape of a globe; spherical; spheroidical.
GLOBE. n. f. [globe, French; globus,
Latin.]
1. A sphere; a ball; a round body: a body of which every part of the surface is at the same distance from the centre.
2. The terraqueous ball.
The youth, whose fortune the vast globe obey'd,
Finding his royal enemy betray'd,
Wept at his fall. Stepney.
Where God declares his intention to give dominion, he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other creatures of this terrestrial globe. Locke.
3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically depicted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.
The Astrologer who spells the stars,
Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye
Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Cleveland.
These are the stars,
But raise thy thought from sense, nor think to find Such figures as are in the globes design'd. Creech.
4. A body of soldiers drawn into a circle.
Him round
A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd,
With bright emblazoning, and horrent arms. Milton.

culus.] A plant. Miller.
GLOBE Thistle. n. f. [carduus orbiculatus.] A plant. Miller.
GLOBOSE. adj. [globosus Latin.] Spherical; round.
Regions, to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the sea; from one entire globose
Stretch'd into longitude. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Then formed the moon
Globose, and ev'ry magnitude of stars. Milton.
GLOBOSITY. n. f. [from globose.] Sphe-ricity; sphericalness.
Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, when the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, 'till at last it appear not at all: no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray on the Creation.
GLOBOUS. adj. [globosus, Latin.] When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose, when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.] Spherical; round.
Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globose earth in plain outspread;
Such are the courts of God! Milton.
The brazen instruments of earth discharge
Horrible flames, and turpid streaming clouds;
Large globous irons fly, or dreadful hiss,
Singing the air. Philips.
GLOBULAR.

GLOBULAR. adj. [globulus, Latin.] Having the form of a small sphere; round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity. Grav.

GLOBULARIA. n. f. [Latin; globulaire, French.] A flosculous flower. Miller.

GLOBULE. n. f. [globule, French; globulus, Latin.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure; as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope. These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo. Newton's Optics.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastic, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globules, cannot admit the greater without a disease. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

GLOBULOUS. adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth. Boyle.

TO GLOMERATE. v. a. [glomerare, Latin.] To gather into a ball or sphere. A filamentous substance gathered into a ball is said to be glomerated, but discontinuous particles are conglobated.

GLOMERATION. n. f. [glomeratio, Latin.]

1. The act of forming into a ball or sphere.
2. A body formed into a ball.

The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot fall but from the air that is very low. Bacon.

GLOMEROUS. adj. [glomerosus, Latin.]

Gathered into a ball or sphere, as a ball of thread.

GLOOM. n. f. [glomanz, Saxon.] twilight.

1. Imperfect darkness; dismalness; obscurity; defect of light.

Glowing embers through the room,
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

This the fear,
That we must change for heav'n? This mournful gloom,
For that celestial light? Milton's Paradise Lost.

The still night, not now, as ere men fell,
Wholesome, and cool, and mild; but with black air
Accompany'd; with damps, and dreadful gloom. Milton.

Now warm in love, now with'ring in thy bloom.
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom. Pope.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind; sullenness.

TO GLOOM. v. n. [from the nonn.]

1. To shine obscurely; as the twilight.

This sense is not now in use.
His glitt'ring armour made
A little glooming light much like a shade. Spenser.

Scarcely had Phoebus in the glooming East
Yet harnessed his fiery footed team. Spenser.

2. To be cloudy; to be dark.
3. To be melancholy; to be sullen.

GLOOMILY. adv. [from gloomy.]

1. Obscurely; dimly; without perfect light; dimly.

2. Sullenly; with cloudy aspect; with dark intentions; not cheerfully.

See, he comes: how gloomily he looks! Dryden.

Gloomily retir'd the spider lives, Thomson.

GLOOMINESS. n. f. [from gloomy.]

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humour, and makes them grow sullen and inconvertible. Collier of the Spleen.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy. Addison.

GLOOMY. adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark, dismal for want of light.

These were from without
The growing miseries, which Adam saw
Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,
To sorrow abandon'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,
Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,
Nor setting visits, nor the lightsome noon. Dryden's Fables.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier, just as the sun is bright or more overcast. Pope.

2. Dark of Complexion.

That fair field
Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flowers,
Herself a fairer flow'r, by gloomy Dis
Was gather'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

GLO'RIED. adj. [from glory.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours. Not in use.
Old respect,

As I suppose, toward your once glory'd friend,
My son, now captive, hither hath inform'd
Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age Came lagging after. Milton's Argonistes.

GLORIFICATION. n. f. [glorification, French, from glorify.] The act of giving glory.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Taylor.

TO GLORIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shakesp.
Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them sit sure, and glorifies the throne. Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged. Hooker.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alledged at that time as an argument for the truth. Hooker.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shakesp.
All nations shall glorify thy name. Pf. lxxxvi. 9.
Our bodies with which the apostle commands us to glorify God, as well as with our souls. Duty of Man.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end: and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver. Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.

Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify. Spenser.
No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall,
Some odoriferous thing, or med'cinal. Donne.

4. To exalt to glory in heaven; to raise to celestial beatitude.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself and shall straightway glorify him. Jo. xiii. 32.

Whom he justified, them he also glorified. Rom. viii. 30.

The members of the church remaining, being perfectly sanctified, shall be eternally glorified; then shall the whole church be truly and perfectly holy. Pearson.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner. Ayliffe's Parergon.

GLORIOUS. adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious; for for all bravery stands upon comparisons. Bacon.

2. Noble; illustrious; excellent. It is frequently used by theological writers, to express the brightness of triumphant sanctity rewarded in heaven.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Dan. iii. 22.

He is glorious in respect of the brightness and splendour of his celestial body still made more glorious and majestick by the authority which his father hath committed to him of the universal Judge. Nelson.

Impartial justice holds here equal scales,
Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,
He now defends the cause that once was thine. Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title. Addif. Cato.

She must stand amongst the first servants of God and be glorious amongst those that have fought the good fight. Law.

If there be nothing so glorious as doing good, if there is nothing that makes us so like to God, then nothing can be so glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness. Law.

GLORIOUSLY. adv. [from glorious.] Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

They inspire with those celestial flames which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend.
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend. Pope.

GLORY. n. f. [gloire, French; gloria, Latin.] Among the old poets it was used sometimes as one syllable, gloré.]

1. Praise paid in adoration.

Glory to God in the highest. Luke. ii. 14.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory. Psal. lxxiii. 24.

Then enter into glory, and resume
His seat at God's right hand, exalted high Above all names in heav'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

It is hardly possible for you to beseech and intreat
God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life. Law.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.

Glory is like a circle in the water,
Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought. Shak. H. VI.

And with that word and warning soon was dight,
Each soldier longing for near coming glory. Fairfax.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,
There have been fewer friends on earth than kings. Cowley.

Can

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of prince, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea. Burnet.

Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown
Of all applause, be fondest of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Matt. vi. 29.

Treated so ill chas'd from your Throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;
And with a brave revenge do show
Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison's Spectator.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.
From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And saints embrace thee with a love like mine. Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in picture.

It is not a converging but a crowning grace; such as one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South.

A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance. Collier of the Aspet.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Wisd. xiv. 14.

On death-beds some, in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die. Young.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame bath glory to come unto. Sidney.

To GLORY. v. n. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgement glorying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hocker.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakespeare.

Your glorying is not good. 1 Cor. v. 6.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height. Addis. Cato.

This title of Freeholder is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison's Freeholder.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Atterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

To GLOSE. v. a. To flatter; to colloque.

See To GLOZE.

GLOSS. n. f. [γλῶσσα; glose, French.]

1. A scholium; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hocker.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach,
With gen'ral voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flatt'ring glose, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text; and taking with the left hand what is offered with the right. Hopfel.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment. Hudibras.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

They give the scandal, and the wise discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.

Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method. Baker on Learning.

Indentures, covenants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense it seems to have another derivation; it has perhaps some affinity to glaze.

His iron coat all over-grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whole glistening glaze deck'd with filthy dust. Spenser.

You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: you painted gloss discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shakespeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which should be worn now in their newest glaze. Shakespeare.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass. Bacon.

Weeds that the wind did toss
The virgin's wort: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss, Like that of oil. Chapman's Iliads.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the Spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator.

3. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hocker, Preface.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakespeare.

The common gloss
Of theologians. Milton.

To GLOSS. v. n. [glosser, French from the noun.]

1. To comment.
Thou detain'st Briseis in thy bands,
By priestly glossing on the god's commands. Dryd.

2. To make sly remarks.
Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment.
In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws,
Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.
Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hocker's Sermons.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Philips.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a saint-like show,

Then I resume the freedom which I gave—
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden's Pers.

GLOSSARY. n. f. [glossarium, Latin; glos-faire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, when delubrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulacrum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries, Stillingfleet.

could add another word to the glossary. Baker.

GLOSSATOR. n. f. [glossator French, from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence: but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

GLOSSER. n. f. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.

2. A polisher.

GLOSSINESS. n. f. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre

Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.

GLOSSOGRAPHER. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γραφω.]

A scholiast; a commentator.

GLOSSOGRAPHY. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γραφω.]

The writing of commentaries.

GLOSSY. adj. [from glossy.] Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place; he had on him a gown with wide sleeves; of a kind of water cambiet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.

His furcoat was a bearskin on his back;
His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,
For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden.

GLOVE. n. f. [glope, Saxon, klaffue, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hand.

They flew about like chaff in the wind;
For haste some left their masks behind,
Some could not stay their gloves to find. Dryden.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

To GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,
Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;
A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That alm'sner of transpiring balm;
So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;
Tender as 'twere a jelly glove'd. Cleveland.

GLOVER. n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife. Shakespeare.

To GLOUT. v. n. [A now word of which I find no etymology.] To pout; to look sullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,
Where, glowing round her rock, to fish she falls. Chapman.

Glouting with sullen spight, the fury shook
Her cloped locks, and blazed with each look. Garth.

To GLOW. v. n. [glopan, Saxon; glowen, Dutch.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But

But silence silence lesseneth not my fire,
But, told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn
Their office upon a tawny front. Shakespeare.

Kunigund, wife to the Emperor Henry II. to show her innocence, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd,
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milton.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison's Ovid.

How op'ning heav'n's their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. South.

Fires that glow,
Shakes of woe. Pope.

3. To feel heat of body.

Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?
Addison's Cato.

The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands. Gay.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.

With smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.
Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays. Dryden.

A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage
A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;
Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow,
Amidst the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.
Bids th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse. Savage.

Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.
Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god. Pope.
Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush forever glow. Pope.
Here clearer stars glow round the frozen pole. Pope.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison's Cato.

For'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew thee just above neglect;
The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect. Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded.
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.

So perish all, whose breasts no'er learn'd to glow
For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.

To pause is always hard.
When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a sullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

To Grow. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakespeare.

GLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.
2. Vehemence of passion.
3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakespeare.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display.
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.

Such as suppose that the great stile might happily be blended with the ornamental, that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaele could unite with the glow and bustle of a Paolo, or Tintoretto, are totally mistaken. Reynolds.

GLOWWORM. n. f. [glow and worm.] A small creeping grub with a luminous tail.

The honey bags steal from the humble bee,
And for night-tapers crop their waxy thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakespeare.

The glowworm shews the matten to be new,
And 'gins to pale his ineffable fire. Shakespeare.

A great light drowns a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone:
He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
Informed, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.

To GLOZE. v. n. [glezan, Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton's Paradise Lost.
So gloz'd the tempter, and his poem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milton.
A false glozing parasite would call his foorthard-ness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Now for a glozing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship. Philips.

2. To comment. This should be gloss.

Which Saigue land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France. Shakespeare.

GLOZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Flattery; insinuation.

Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by. Shakespeare.

2. Specious show; gloss. Not used.

Precious couches full oft are shaken with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not hidden,
Shall such morning dew be an ease to the heat of a lover's fire? Sidney.

GLOZER. n. f. [from gloze.] A flatterer.

GLUE. n. f. [glu, French, gluten, Latin, glud, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a gelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors:
so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Natural History.
The driest and most transparent glue is the best. Moxon.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse. Blackmore.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a glue. Arbutnot on Aliments.

To GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glue many friends to thee. Shakespeare. Henry VI.

Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that *glue*th a pot-sherd together. Eccles. xxii. 7.

The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinsel crown, or a circle of stars, *glue*d to the canvass over the head of the

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air,
the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Derham.

2. To hold together.

The parts of all homogeneal hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are *glue*d together by rest; that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton's Opt.

3. To join; to unite; to inviscate.

Those wasps in a honeypot are sensual men plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once *glue*d to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Estrange.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debate mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tillotson.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly *glue*d
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd. Dryden.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms. Pope.

GLUEBOILER. n. f. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.

GLUER. n. f. [from glue.] One who ce- ments with glue.

GLUM. adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting gloom.] Sullen; stubbornly grave.

'Till cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton.

2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to sate; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the King and Queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.

Love breaks friendship,
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.

What way remove

His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dryden.

No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden's Æm.

I found
The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new. Pope.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.

With death's carcass glut the grave. Milton.
His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes. Dryden.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many
To view at last the whole. Dryden.

4. To overfill; to load.

He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once. Arbutnot.

Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

So death

Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his rav'nous maw. Milton.

Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope to Swift.

3. More than enough; overmuch.

If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.

The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage. Woodward.

GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutineux, French; from gluten, Latin.] Gluy; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and pro-portionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects; the one that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members. Bacon.

Next this marble venom'd seat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.

Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued
by the vital force. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GLUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.

There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinousness, and the friction of their parts. Cheyne.

GLUTTON. n. f. [glutton, French; from glutio, Latin, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catsflesh baked. Bacon.

Through Macer's gullet she runs down
While the vile glutton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibb's endless draught. Prior.

If a glutton was to say in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy, covetous, ambitious tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business. Law.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love. Coruley.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ. Granville.

TO GLUTTON'ISE. v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton; to be luxurious.

GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
And take down th' interest in their glutt'nous maws. Shakespeare.

The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we press nature with overweighty burdens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.

Well observe

The rule of not too much, by temperance taught In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence Due nourishment, no gluttonous delight. Milton.

GLUTTONOUSLY. adv. [from gluttonous.] With the voracity of a glutton.

GLUTTONY. n. f. [glutonie, French; from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone. Milton.

Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbutnot.

GLUY. adj. [from glue.] Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gluy
spumous matter. Harvey on Conf.

With gluy wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour let it have but one quality of being very gluy or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotto. Addison.

GLYN. n. f. [Irish; gleann, glyn, plur. Erse; glenn, Scottish.] A hollow between two mountains.

Though he could not beat out the Irish, yet he

And wolves are gnarling who shall gnaw thee first. Shakespeare.

Gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light. Shakespeare. Rich. II.

The gnarling porter durst not whine for doubt;
Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke. Fairfax.

GNARLED. adj. [gnar, nar, or nurr, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks.] Knotty.

Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unwedgable, and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas.

TO GNASH. v. a. [knaschen, Dutch.] To strike together; to clash.

The seer, who could not yet this wrath assuage,
Row'd his green eyes, that sparkl'd with his rage,
And gnash'd his teeth. Dryd. Virg.

TO GNASH. v. n.

GO'DFATHER. n. f. [god and father.] The sponsor at the font.

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand godfather to his child. Bacon.
Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name, the baptismal vow ; and, that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.

GO'DHEAD. n. f. [from god.]

2. Godship ; deity ; divinity ; divine nature. It is used both of idols and of the true god.

Be content ;
Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift. Shakespeare.
At the holy mount
Of heav'n's high-seated top, th' imperial throne
Of godhead, fix'd for ever firm and sure,
The filial pow'r arriv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.
So may thy godhead be confest,
So the returning year be blest. Prior.

2. A deity in person ; a god or goddeffs.
Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakespeare's Timon.
Adorning first the genius of the place,
The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown. Dryden's Aen.

GO'DLESS. adj. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God : atheistical ; wicked ; irreligious ; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hooker.

That godless crew Rebellious. Milton.

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes
Of godless men, and of rebellious times,
Him his upgrateful country sent,
Their best Camillus, into banishment. Dryden.

GO'DLIKE. adj. [god and like.] Divine ; resembling a divinity ; supremely excellent.

Thus Adam his illustrious guest besought,
And thus the godlike angel answer'd mild. Milton.
Musing and much revolving in his breast,
How best the mighty work he might begin
Of Saviour to mankind, and which way first Publish his godlike office now mature. Milton.
That prince shall be so wise and godlike, as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind. Locke.

GO'DLING. n. f. [from god.] A little divinity ; a diminutive god.

Thy puny godlings of inferior race,
Whose humble statues are content with bras. Dryden.

GO'DLINESS. n. f. [from godly.]

1. Piety to god.
2. General observation of all the duties prescribed by religion.
Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God. Hooker.

GO'DLY. adj. [from god.]

1. Pious towards God.
Grant that we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life. Common Prayer.

2. Good ; righteous ; religious.
Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail among the children of men. Pf. xii. 1.
The same church is really holy in this world, in relation to all godly persons contained in it, by a real infused sanctity. Pearson.

GODLY. adv. Piously ; righteously. By analogy it should be godlily, but the repetition of the syllable is too harsh.

The apostle St. Paul teacheth, that every one that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Hooker.

GO'DLYHEAD. n. f. [from godly.] Goodness ; righteousness. An old word.

For this, and many more such outrage,
I crave your godlyhead to assuage
The rancorous rigour of his might. Spenser.

GO'DMOTHER. n. f. [god and mother.] A woman who has undertaken sponsorship in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

GO'DSHIP. n. f. [from god.] The rank or character of a god ; deity ; divinity.

Discouraging largely on this theme,
O'er hills and dales their godships came. Prior.

GO'DSON. n. f. [god and son.] One for whom one has been sponsor at the font.

What, did my father's godson seek your life ?
He whom my father named ? your Edgar ? Shakespeare.

GO'DWARD. adj. To Godward is toward God. So we read, Hac Arcthusa tenus, for hactenus Arcthusa.

And such trust have we through Christ to Godward. 2 Cor.

GO'DWIT. n. f. [god, good, and wit, an animal.] A bird of particular delicacy.

Nor ortolans nor godwits crown his board. Cowley.

GO'DYELD. } adv. [corrupted from God
GO'DYIELD. } sbtd or protect.] A term of thanks. Now not used

Herein I teach you,
How you should bid godyeld us for your pains,
And thank us for your trouble. Shakespeare, Macbeth.

GOEL. adj. [golen, Saxon.] Yellow. An old word.

In March, at the furthest, dry season or wet, !
Hop roots so well chosen let skilful go set ;
The goeler and younger, the better I love ;
Well gutted and pared, the better they prove. Tusser.

GO'ER. n. f. [from go.]

1. One that goes : a runner.
I would they were in Africk both together,
Myself by with a needle, that I might prick
The gorr back. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Such a man

Might

Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which, follow'd well, would now demonstrate them
But goers backward. Shakef. All's well.

Nothing could hurt either of us so much as the Intervening officious impertinence of those goers between us, who in England pretend to intimacies with you, and in Ireland to intimacies with me.

Pope to Swift.

2. A walker; one that has a gait or manner of walking good or bad.

The earl was so far from being a good dancer,
that he was no graceful goer. Wotton.

3. The foot. Obsolete.

A double mantle, cast

Athwart his shoulders, his faire goers grac'd
With fitted shoes. Chapman.

To GOGGLE. v. n. To look askint.

Inflam'd all over with disgrace,
To be seen by her in such a place,
Which made him hang his head, and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl. Hudibras.
Nor sighs, nor groans, nor goggling eyes did want. Dryden.

GOGGLE-EYED. adj. [roeglegen, Saxon.]

Squint-eyed; not looking strait.

They are deformed, unnatural, or lame; and very unseemly to look upon, except to men that be goggle-eyed themselves. Ascham.

Go'ING. n. f. [from go.]

1. The act of walking.

When nobles are their taylor's tutors,
No hereticks burnt, but wenches suitors,
Then comes the time, who lives to see't,
That going shall be us'd with feet. Shakespeare.

2. Pregnancy.

The time of death has a far greater latitude than that of our birth; most women coming, according to their reckoning, within the compass of a fortnight; that is, the twentieth part of their going. Grew's Cosmol. Sacra.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milton.

Go'LA. n. f. The same with CYMATIUM.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona,
the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble show. Speculator.

GOLD. n. f. [gold, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gelden, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money. Peacham on Drawing.]

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies, not to be injured either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt.
Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. Pure Gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Natural History.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakef.

We readily say this is a gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.

The gold fraught vessel which mad tempests beat,
He sees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden.

Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,

Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakef.

Thou that so stoutly had resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shak.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσὴν ἀφροδίτην; and animamque moresque aureos educit in astra. Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold,
A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakef. Henry V.

GOLD of Pleasure. n. f. [myagrum.] A plant.

Go'LD BEATER. n. f. [gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit fake, they are wont to use the finest gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Boyle.

Go'LD BEATER'S Skin. n. f. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.

When your gillyflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer.

Go'LD BOUND. adj. [gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.

Thy air,

Thou other goldbound brow is like the first. Shakef.

Go'LDEN. adj. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

O would to God that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must wound my brow,
Were red hot steel to fear me to the brain. Shakef.
Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold. Dryd.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent blossom of the deep. Shakef.
'Tis better to be lowly born
Than wear a golden sorrow. Shakef. Henry VIII.

Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Crashaw.

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
Howe'er she shines all golden to you now. Dryden.
And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining soft on many a golden cloud. Rowe.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.

Golden rustling hath a gold coloured coat under a rustlet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour. Mortimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sort of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest glos,
Not cast aside so soon. Shakef. Macbeth.
That verse which they commonly call golden, has two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.
Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us. Watts.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world. Shakef.

Go'LDEN Saxifrage. n. f. [chrysopleurium.]
An herb.

Go'LDENLY. adv. [from golden.] Delightfully; splendidly.

My brother Jacques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit. Shakef. As you like it.

Go'LD FINCH. n. f. [goldfinc, Saxon.] A singing bird, so named from his golden colour. This is called in Staffordshire proud taylor.

Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, Canary-birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

Go'LD FINDER. n. f. [gold and find.] One who finds gold. A term ludicrously applied to those that empty jakes.

His empty paunch that he might fill,
He suck'd his vittels through a quill;
Untouch'd it pass'd between his grinders,
Or't had been happy for goldfinders. Swift.

Go'LD HAMMER. n. f. A kind of bird. Dist.
